SAT 12:15 Music Feature (b00c6sgt)

Debussy's Summer of 1912

Lowri Blake presents a programme about Debussy's work during the summer of 1912, talking to pianists Roy Howat, Peter Hill and Alasdair Beatson as well as musicologist Robert Orledge, and introducing music from that time.

It was a very hot summer and Debussy had no time to take his wife and seven-year-old daughter Chouchou on their annual trip to the seaside, much to her displeasure. He had to compose a Diaghilev commission as well as his last completed orchestral work - the ballet Jeux. He was trying to finish the second book of the Preludes for piano, was working on numerous other projects and was tussling with the dancer Maud Allen who wanted changes to the ballet Khamma. He also had a visit from Stravinsky and together they played through, as a piano duet, the score of The Rite of Spring. It made a very significant impression on him.

SUN 00:00 The Early Music Show (b00c4c9m)

The King's Singers

The King's Singers were founded in 1968, and so to celebrate their 40th anniversary, Robert Hollingworth guest presents a programme focussing on the large amount of 16th and 17th century repertoire covered by the group. Robert hosts a round the table chat and welcomes founder baritone Simon Carrington, who is now Professor of Choral Conducting at Yale University, and two current members of the group, the counter-tenor David Hurley and baritone Christopher Gabbitas. They chat about the early influences of the group in this repertoire and how approaches to this music have changed over the King's Singers 40 years. Music in the programme includes works by Lassus and Josquin, and an early recording from 1973 of Janequin's La Guerre, plus music from a recent recording of Tenebrae Responsories by Gesualdo.

Ideas - The British Version

Episode 1

In a programme exploring the origins of British intellectual traditions and their subsequent influence in the UK and abroad, historian and broadcaster Tristram Hunt examines the English philosopher John Locke's Letter Concerning Toleration and follows its influence across history and the world.

Written in 1689 at a time of Protestant persecution, Locke's work called for a new understanding of the relationship between religion and the state. Tristram visits Holland - where Locke wrote the Letter in exile - to hear about religious tolerance there and how it compared with contemporary England. Many Huguenots had fled religious persecution in France and he also visits one of their churches in London - which now functions as a mosque - to see what effect Locke's thinking had on the English establishment and faith communities of the 17th century as well as assessing its relevance today in multi-faith Britain.

Bidisha talks to Lou Reed about his bleak 1973 album Berlin which is the subject of a new film and his latest tour. He discusses the agony of writing, which books he was reading when he wrote it and how what he really wanted to do was act.

Critic Michelle Roberts talks about the posthumous publication of New Zealand author Janet Frame's 1963 book Towards Another Summer, which at the time of writing was deemed too personal for public consumption.

French tightrope walker Philippe Petit and filmmaker James Marsh tell Bidisha about the new film telling the story of Petit's walk between the towers of New York's World Trade Center in 1974. It shows how he stepped out onto a wire he and a gang of his friends had strung between the Twin Towers before walking back and forth without a harness or a net, to the wonderment of the city below.

And playwright Roy Williams discusses the new film of his play Fallout, detailing the aftermath of the murder of a teenage boy by a gang in London to television.

Tomas Luis de Victoria

The Roman International

Focusing on Victoria's extensive collection of music for Holy Week, Donald Macleod and Jeremy Summerly explain how the composer took full advantage of the opportunities open to him in 16th-century Rome - an exciting city for any budding musician or priest. He was employed as a musician at two of the local Spanish churches and at two of the city's Jesuit colleges before being fast-tracked to the priesthood.

WED 20:45 Composer of the Week (b00c8r07)

[Repeat of broadcast at 12:00 today]

WED 21:45 Night Waves (b00c8r0h)

Philip Dodd and guests discuss whether mankind has reached the end of the 'golden age of food' and, if so, what can be done about it.

They consider the question of recent rises in food prices, said to be driven by a combination of greater use of bio-fuels, changing patterns of consumption in India and China as well as climate change, asking whether we been dangerously complacent.

Can and should Western consumers change their relationship with food so that it is not driven by pure economic considerations? Or should we look to new technologies such as GM to deliver the changes needed to meet the problems faced today?

And they ask why equal numbers of people in the world are at risk of obesity as are undernourished, while we seem to lurch from one mass production scare to the next, whether BSE or avian flu. How did we get here and could the crisis we are facing have been avoided?
