9.30am Building a Library: Dr Flora Willson on Mahler's Das Lied von der Erde

Mahler's Das Lied von der Erde, 'Song of the Earth', is a set of six songs for two voices and orchestra, but is it a song-cycle or a symphony? Mahler certainly intended for Das Lied von der Erde to reflect the world in co taining everything, the whole range of human emotions and earthly experience, but the work doesn't easily fall into either the category of song-cycles or truly symphonic works. Mahler drew his texts for Das Lied from a compendium called The Chinese Flute, a translation of Chinese poems by the German poet Hans Bethge.

Mahler wrote Das Lied von der Erde in 1908-9 within a year of losing his beloved daughter Maria and receiving the diagnosis of the heart condition that would kill him in 1911. The work begins and ends with two of Mahler's most famous songs: Das Trinklied vom Jammer der Erde (The Drinking Song of Earth's Sorrows) and Der Abschied (The Farewell), a hauntingly beautiful, bleak and heartrending farewell to life as the 'sun sets behind the mountains.' The intervening songs are the introspective 'Der Einsame im Herbst' (The Lonely One in Autumn) for mezzo soprano, the sprightly 'Von der Jugend' (Of Youth) for tenor, 'Von der Schönheit' (Of Beauty) depicting an innocent scene by a river bank where girls are picking flowers but are then briefly threatened by the arrival of boys on horseback, and 'Der Trunkene im Frühling' (The Drunkard in Spring).

SAT 11:45 Music Matters (m000x5wp)
Musical Strength

Linton Stephens is joined by the soprano Nadine Benjamin ahead of a performance of her autobiographical opera BEAM, part of the Summer as Snape season. She reflects on how music has the power to heal and why she finds strength in her voice.

The music psychologist Natasha Hendry talks to Linton about her research into race and racism in music education and the music industry.

As Radio 3 celebrates the London Festival of Architecture, Music Matters visits Bold Tendencies at its unique home in Peckham's former Multi-Story Car Park, and speaks to the organisation's founder Hannah Barry, the acoustician Dave Parsons, the pianist Samson Tsoy and producer Fraser Smith, to learn how the building's fabric impacts sound quality and informs artistry.

And, Linton also hears from soprano Stephanie Corley, director James Brining, and conductor James Holmes, about a new collaborative production of A Little Night Music by both Opera North and the Leeds Playhouse, and learns how Sondheim's portrayal of human relationships speaks to audiences today.

SAT 12:30 This Classical Life (m000x5wr)
Jess Gillam with... AyseDeniz Gokcin

Jess Gillam is joined by composer and pianist AyseDeniz Gokcin to share the music they love. With passionate and romantic music by Rachmaninov, Chopin and Brahms, the celestial and other worldly sounds of Jennifer Higdon's Blue Cathedral and Max Richter's Journey CP1919, plus the powerful empowering force that is Beyonce.

SAT 13:00 Inside Music (m0009b93)

Singer and composer Sarah Dacey with orchestral storms and vocal tricks

Singer and composer Sarah Dacey is not only a member of the innovative vocal trio Juice Ensemble, but is also a composer and violinist with fond memories of playing in string quartets and youth orchestras as a teenager.

Her choice of music today ranges from a haunting traditional tune from Northumberland discovered when she was writing music for a play at the National Theatre, to the vistas created by Richard Strauss in his cinematic Alpine Symphony.

Sarah also plays a stunning piece of vocalized Quincy Jones by the French precursors to the Swingle Singers, Les Doubles Six, and reveals that she understands more about the pianistic talents of her great grandmother since listening to Martha Argerich playing a certain scherzo by Chopin.

A series in which each week a musician explores a selection of music - from the inside.

Clint Mansell

Matthew Sweet talks to Coventry born Clint Mansell, founder member of the group Pop Will Eat Itself, and one of the most distinctive composers of modern film. His credits include 'Requiem for a Dream', 'The Fountain', 'Black Swan' 'Loving Vincent', 'Rebecca' and many others, including his latest score for Ben Wheatley's new film 'In The Earth', which is released this week. Clint talks with Matthew about his approach to writing for film, the people who have inspired him, and his regular working relationships with directors Ben Wheatley and Darren Aronofsky. He also speaks about working with the film director Duncan Jones on his sci-fi masterpiece 'Moon' and how significant this was for him, not least because he had idolised Jones's father, David Bowie. And Clint Mansell speaks candidly and movingly about the sudden death of his girlfriend and how this impacted his music for the film High Rise.

Sarah Walker with an intriguing musical mix

Sarah Walker chooses three hours of attractive and uplifting music to complement your morning.

As spring moves to summer via the solstice, Sarah reflects the new season in music. There's a feeling of warm, hazy days in Joseph Suk's Summer Impressions, a promise of bountiful months ahead in the 13th-century song 'Miri it is while summer lasts' and an orchestral picture of dawn to dusk in Prokofiev's Summer Day.

Plus a fresh take on a familiar English round to get you dancing.

Natalie Haynes

Comedian and classicist Natalie Haynes talks to Michael Berkeley about her favourite music, making the classics funny and the joy of running.

Just like the ancient Greek dramatists she loves, Natalie excels in both tragedy and comedy. She has written three novels, which retell stories from Greek myth, and she has had a long-running parallel career as a stand-up comedian, including her hugely popular Radio 4 series, Natalie Haynes Stands up for the Classics. Central to all her work is her focus on the much-neglected stories of women in the ancient world and particularly in Greek myth.

Natalie talks to Michael about why stories and myths from the ancient world continue to resonate so powerfully today and how classics is changing as women scholars and novelists reclaim ancient stories and retell them from a female perspective.

She chooses music by Elgar, by Cole Porter, and by two contemporary women composers, Annelies van Parys and Calliope Tsoupanaki, who have been inspired by women in Greek myth. And we hear one of the best-loved pieces inspired by a classical story: Dido's Lament, from Purcell's Dido and Aeneas.

We hear the music by Lin-Manuel Miranda, which Natalie loves to run to, and a surprising choice, which for her conjures up the beauty and power of the music of Orpheus.

Style Counsel

Tom Service dispenses Style Counsel - what are the different eras in music history, and how can you tell them from each other? How did they come about and grow and change? And as Radio 3 is about to launch its New Year New Music season, is there an overarching distinguishing style in music today? Tom is joined by composer and writer Neil Brand at the piano for some answers.

SUN 17:30 Words and Music (m000x6kh)

Building and Sound

According to Goethe, "Architecture is frozen music". If that's the case, then today's programme will be putting some heat under that architecture and seeing what emerges. This exploration of buildings and sound features music written for specific places and music that incorporates the sounds of buildings - Hildegard von Bingen's plainsong exploits the natural reverberation of churches and cathedrals, an Iain Chambers composition uses the sounds of Brutalist architecture in Paris, while Valerie Coleman's Clarinet Quintet evokes the shotgun house where she grew up in West Louisville, Kentucky. The readings by Marilyn Nnadebe and Henry Goodman take us to the soured utopia of a Peckham estate in the poetry of Caleb Femi; through a vast maze-like fantasy of a house in Susanna Clark's novel Piranesi; and to architect Marwa al-Sabouni's reflections on the Great Umayyad mosque in Damascus.

Readings:

Thomas Hardy - Architectural Masks
Emily Dickinson - The props assist the house
Susanna Clarke - Piranesi
William Golding - The Spire
Caleb Femi - Because of the Times
Mark Danielewski - House of Leaves
China Mieville - The Scar
Simon Armitage - Still For Sale
Elizabeth Bishop - Jeronimo's House
Andrew Marvell - Upon Appleton House
Marwa al-Sabouni - Building for Hope
Philip Larkin - Church Going
Peter Porter - Doll's House
John Gould Fletcher - Demolition of the Waldorf-Astoria

Unmouthed

What happens to a creative mind when it has everything taken away?

Many writers and composers are eccentric, some might even be labelled 'mad'. But that generally is not a bar to having their voice heard. Once an artist is certified insane however, the way in which their work is viewed changes forever. And their ability to share their creativity is taken from them in the most extreme way society offers.

Ivor Gurney, outrageously gifted composer and poet, lost everything when mental health problems saw him committed to an asylum after the First World War. A composer who had been considered one of the best of his generation would remain behind closed doors until his death.

Ivor Gurney was tricked into being certified, when a magistrate and two doctors were invited incognito to his house, and waited, reading the newspaper, for him to incriminate himself. They were about to leave, finding nothing odd about him, but just at the last minute, he approached the magistrate to ask if he might borrow a revolver with which to shoot himself. That one question set the course for the rest of his life. Being suicidal was enough to ensure incarceration in an asylum, and Gurney was never again a free man.

He had few visitors, and interest in his music and poems ebbed away.

But on a scrap of paper, hidden away in a box in an archive, you can see Gurney talking about music scores in his mental hospital room – he calls them 'poor unmouthed creatures'.

For 15 years, Gurney continued to write – hundreds of beautiful, moving, compelling and troubling works - which disappeared, unheard and unpublished.

In this programme, writer and broadcaster Dr Kate Kennedy travels to the asylum for the first time, seeing the buildings where Gurney spent his years and traces his journey inside. She gains access to Gurney's archives - discovering a treasure trove of lost compositions and poems. Words and music about the Gloucestershire landscape Gurney would never again see; about his mental state; about thoughts of suicide; about the devastating effects of war.

Together with poet Andrew Motion and musicologist Stephen Johnson, Kate Kennedy explores the lost works of Gurney. And we hear previously unheard songs which tenor Nicky Spence and pianist Dylan Perez rehearse and perform especially for the programme.

Through examining his manuscripts, we find Gurney being deprived of a pen, the tool of his trade. He was obliged to compose his poetry and music in pencil – a pen nib could be used to slash wrists. We chart his many attempts (some successful) to escape from the institutions that confined him. On one occasion he managed to get as far as Vaughan Williams's house, who was faced with the impossible situation of having to hand his own pupil over to the police.

Through conversations with asylum employees, we learn that Vaughan Williams and Arthur Benjamin actually regularly visited Gurney in the asylum to play through his latest compositions, all of which have been neglected since. We find one asylum doctor, Dr Anderson, who cared, and tried to help him (and interview his son), and others who undertook horrendous experiments on him, injecting him with malaria. In Gurney's medical notes, he is found to be two stone lighter, and 'on his knees, praying for death.'

The programme ends with his death from near-starvation and tuberculosis, alone and forgotten over Christmas of 1937.

Lorenzaccio

Often referred to as the French Hamlet, Lorenzaccio by Alfred de Musset is one of the great classics of the French repertoire. Written soon after the July revolution of 1830, when King Charles X of France was deposed in favour of a constitutional monarchy, the play scrutinises the strength of republican sentiments in the face of despotic leadership and the challenge of violent overthrow.

This play is a grand, epic, political drama about identity and action. It pivots around key characters, portrayed with clarity and intensity, asking how can good men survive in bad times. The cast includes Tom Hughes, star of Victoria, Olivier Award winners Toby Jones and Tanya Moodie.

Dan Rebellato, leading radio dramatist, has written his own, fresh new version of this striking French classic. An exciting sound world created by award winning sound designer Eloise

Whitmore brings out the intimacy of the fevered discussions about political strategy and moral choices in an immoral world.

The moral ambiguity of political leadership is of great concern in the 21st century, and this 19th century drama is a brilliant exploration of burning issues for today, asking questions about the crises in our own liberal democracies.

Lorenzaccio explores where right intersects with wrong and how absolute political power can intoxicate and derail.

The story

Florence, 1537. Lorenzo is a young man from a good family, but he has joined the court of the Medici as an advisor and he is fully participating in their libertine excesses. His family, politically opposed to the Duke, are disgusted by him.

But in reality, Lorenzo has infiltrated the court with the specific aim of assassinating the Duke – however, now he does not know if he can. He has spent so much time pretending to be corrupt, he does not know who he really is. 'I wore vice like a garment,' he declares, 'but now it has become my skin'.

When his brother is murdered and the Duke demands that Lorenzo bring him his own young sister Louisa as his next mistress, it stirs him to action. Even though he no longer believes anything will change, he murders the Duke. As the city erupts, Lorenzo escapes to Venice. Unsure what to do, unsure if his actions will change anything, he makes an existential decision. The play ends with the status quo maintained, as a new Duke is crowned, and Lorenzo steps out into the open of the Rialto and to certain death.

SUN 23:00 The Art of Simplicity with Stuart Maconie (m000pm8z)
The Grand Scheme of Things

Broadcaster Stuart Maconie is fascinated by the way composers and musicians have found inspiration and innovation in the principles of simplicity. In this two-part series, he investigates how the idea of purity and taking things back to basics has meant different things at different times.

Episode two looks at how simplicity doesn't necessarily mean small forces and sparse sonic worlds, that simple music can also emulate monolithic austerity and colossal form. These techniques are heard in pieces like Ellen Arkbro's immersive organ drones and their awe-inspiring, massive escarpments of sound. The grandness of simplicity is also found in the works of the so-called holy minimalists, composers like Arvo Part who have used techniques of frugality of expression, silence and stasis to evoke the mystical or divine.

'Simple' music can exude a freshness that can be bright or grave, vivacious or solemn and is not the same as easy listening. It is never tricky, dry or freighted with self-regard, but above all else, music. Pure and simple.

Henry Purcell (1659-1695)

Music Born of Turmoil

Donald Macleod explores Purcell's turbulent early years amidst a plague that killed a quarter of London's population, which was swiftly followed by the Great Fire of London.

This week of programmes sets Purcell's work during his short life in the context of the turbulent times in which he lived. Purcell was a chorister in a court that often couldn't afford to clothe its choirboys, Charles II occasionally having to borrow the money from his own choirmaster. Purcell was taught by John Blow and Matthew Locke, replacing Locke when he died and becoming 'composer in ordinary' at the court.

The Restoration of the British monarchy triggered an explosion of culture, with music restored to the court after its banishment under Oliver Cromwell. Purcell was at the heart of royal life, and was swiftly appointed organist at Westminster Abbey, then of the Chapel Royal, and Keeper of the King's Instruments.

Today, we hear the political intrigue surrounding Purcell, amidst his earliest music, including - in 1680 alone - his first stage work, Theodosius; his first royal 'welcome' ode; and his first dazzling collection of chamber music.

Henry Purcell (1659-1695)

Sacred Journey

Donald Macleod explores Purcell's sacred writing amidst the ongoing political tension surrounding Charles II's illegitimate son the Duke of Monmouth, who had designs on the throne, backed by Parliament's Whigs.

This week of programmes sets Purcell's work during his short life in the context of the turbulent times in which he lived. This was a period of intense political and social change, encompassing three different monarchies, plague, the Great Fire of London and the arrival of another deadly pandemic.

From his entry into Charles II's court in 1679, Purcell wrote no stage work for six years. His primary job was to write welcome odes for the King's return visits to London. And yet his own personal life was also at its most tumultuous. Married in 1680, Purcell lost his first newborn child the following year, along with his uncle Thomas Purcell in 1681, himself a composer at the court.

Charles II's death in 1685, and his successor James II's overhaul of the Chapel Royal with foreign musicians, led to a musical shift in gear for Purcell, who decided to write devotional songs instead of religious anthems.

Notes from Scotland: Kowalski – Reyes Duo

Award-winning recital partners American cellist Madelyn Kowalski and Colombian pianist Maurizio Arroyo Reyes perform a recital of French and Czech music written during conflict. They begin with one of Debussy's last three sonatas, written in 1915 and originally subtitled 'Pierrot is angry at the moon'. Twenty-five years later during the Second World War, Poulenc sketched out his cello sonata with completely different textures, lighter in feel with theatrical flair. The duo's final work, Martinu's Variations on a Theme of Rossini, was written in 1942 and dedicated to the esteemed Russian cellist of the time Gregor Piatigorsky. This recital was recorded in January 2021 at the Royal Conservatoire of Scotland.

Orchestral Enchantment and Grandeur

Light and carefree, Mendelssohn's incidental music to A Midsummer Night's Dream depicts the fairy realm of Shakespeare's play with enchanting, perhaps even enchanted, music. Scriabin's Réverie, for all its brevity, is packed full of luscious harmonies interwoven to create a swirling dreamscape that ebbs and flows mysteriously. The concert ends with one of the really great, late-Romantic symphonies, Sibelius's epic Fifth, which has a sweep and grandeur triumphing over passing feelings of anxiety to celebrate the heroic, optimistic power of life.

Building London

Stew, the name for brothels in London. A townhouse set to become luxury flats in the centre of Soho is the focus of the new novel Hot Stew from Fiona Mozley, who was shortlisted for the Booker Prize for her debut book Elmet. SI Martin founded the 500 Years of Black London walks nearly 20 years ago. In his novel Incomparable World he depicts a bustling 18th-century London which offers a refuge for the many black Americans who fought for liberty on the side of the British. Plus pianist and composer Belle Chen on her six original new pieces exploring London - each composition with its genesis in a field recording in the city from both before and during the pandemic. They join architects Eric Parry and Alison Brooks and presenter Laurence Scott for a conversation about the development of London, as part of the London Festival of Architecture. Alison Brooks is one of the judges for this year's Davidson Prize Exhibition: A digital showcase of architects' solutions to ways of living in a post-pandemic world. Eric Parry has been thinking about the changing city skyline.

Episode 2

In her series reflecting on different dimensions of home, the writer and journalist Madeleine Bunting turns her attention to homesickness. In the American Civil War, soldiers were believed to have died of it. 17th-century Swiss mercenaries were prone to it, particularly when they heard the Swiss horn played; and generations of British children were expected to toughen it out in boarding schools, where learning to endure homesickness almost became part of a national strategy.

Henry Purcell (1659-1695)

Music on Demand

Donald Macleod explores the music Purcell wrote to mark specific occasions, and reveals the impact that changes in monarch had on his work.

This week of programmes sets Purcell's work during his short life in the context of the turbulent times in which he lived. This was a period of intense political and social change, encompassing three different monarchies, plague, the Great Fire of London and the arrival of another deadly pandemic.

By 1687 London's royal musicians were in rebellious mood, letting their performances at chapel slip. This disobedience was being mirrored by the public at large. Bungling James II had alienated large swathes of the country, as well as influential groups like the bishops, who had wide popular respect. When the King's court case against the bishops failed humiliatingly, Londoners celebrated wildly. It was the beginning of the end for this unpopular ruler.

As a twenty-something court composer, Purcell wrote his first ode to celebrate Charles II's return from summering in Windsor. When William and Mary took the throne in 1689, Purcell wrote odes for special occasions such as the return of the monarchy to court. And for the coronation itself he turned from composer into ticket tout – selling viewing tickets for Westminster Abbey's organ loft, which was under his control.

Some of Purcell's most celebrated work was written as birthday odes for Queen Mary, but by far his most famous and enduring music was that written for her funeral in 1695.

Classical music for focus and inspiration

A woozy version of Donald Byrd's Cristo Redentor opens tonight's Mixtape, a work Byrd described as "a modern hymnal... approaching this tradition with respect and great pleasure". The gallant double bourée of JS Bach's Cello Suite No 3 in C major BWV 1009 next, a rollicking nonet by Louise Farrenc - the only woman to hold a full chair at the Paris Conservatoire in the 18th century - and Shostakovich's unashamedly heart-on-his-sleeve Romance from The Gadfly. Then Toumani and Sidiki Diabaté's chiming koras follow the "perfect love and adoration" of Gavin Bryars's Lauda Dami conforto. Dio - Give me comfort, O God, and joy. And to end, the sprightly finale from Haydn's Symphony No 53, "L'Impériale".

Beverley & East Riding Early Music Festival

Two glorious concerts this evening from the sumptuous surroundings of Beverley Minster, nestled in the east Yorkshire countryside between York and Hull.

As part of the 2021 Beverley & East Riding Early Music Festival, vocal ensemble Stile Antico take us "Toward the Dawn". Their programme charts a course from twilight to sunrise, seductive and unsettling in equal measure. Taverner's mighty Ave Dei patris filia stands at the end of a delicious sequence of sacred music, chansons and madrigals by English and Continental composers including Byrd, Lassus and Tallis. Thrill to the spine-tingling sounds of Allegri's beloved Miserere and enter into the glorious sound world of Nico Muhly's Gentle Sleep, a haunting setting of words by Shakespeare, written especially for the twelve voices of Stile Antico.

Then, the acclaimed instrumental ensemble La Serenissima brings the life-affirming music of 18th-century Venice and Northern Italy in the form of music by Vivaldi, Samartini and Zavatari. Sharing the stage with recorder virtuoso Tabea Debus, La Serenissima's concert is guaranteed to lift the spirits and truly bring the heady sounds of the Venetian summer to the East Riding of Yorkshire.

Henry Purcell (1659-1695)

Backstage. Onstage

Donald Macleod takes us backstage in London's new Restoration era theatres to hear the stage music Purcell wrote set against the changing political environment in which those plays were conceived.

This week of programmes sets Purcell's work during his short life in the context of the turbulent times in which he lived. This was a period of intense political and social change, encompassing three different monarchies, plague, the Great Fire of London and the arrival of another deadly pandemic.

A homesick William III hated London, and was not a big patron of the arts as his predecessor, Charles II, had been. The court lost its importance as the centre of London's musical life and Purcell increasingly turned his attention towards theatre and public concerts. Many set the words of John Dryden, including the comedy Amphitryon, The Indian Queen and King Arthur. In 1689, the year William and Mary were crowned, Purcell wrote his only full opera, Dido and Aeneas.

THU 13:00 Radio 3 Lunchtime Concert (m000x78x)

Notes from Scotland: Daniel Pioro and Simon Smith

Cassandra Miller's work for solo violin opens this recital, with a play on translations; we hear a violin rendition of an American folk song, originally performed by Nirvana singer Kurt Cobain and transcribed by computer. Next follows a sequence of movements from Bach's Sonata no. 3 in E, interspersed with Nico Muhly's Drones and Violin, before Linda Catlin Smith's darker work exploring 'two entities traveling the same path'. Daniel Pioro and Simon Smith bring us back into the light with their last piece, Vaughan Williams's work inspired by a poem, describing the heavenly song of a Lark. Recorded at the Royal Conservatoire of Scotland in March 2021.

Cassandra Miller: For Mira (solo violin)
Bach: Sonata no.3 in E, BWV 1016 - first movement
Nico Muhly: Drones and Violin – first movement

Of Paradise and Light

Dalia Stasevska, Principal Guest Conductor of the BBC Symphony Orchestra, and her strings bring dance rhythms, American inflexions, and Jazz notes in a programme ranging from the Baroque to the contemporary. The sparkle of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, and Stravinsky's equally exhilarating reimagining of the Baroque era in Dumbarton Oaks frame two American works.

For Aaron Copland's Clarinet Concerto comes luxury casting with Richard Hosford the BBC Symphony Orchestra's Principal Clarinetist as soloist. Richard's recording of the work has consistently won BBC Radio 3's Record Review Building a Library.

Plus Augusta Read Thomas's Of Paradise and Light (2010), a song without voices, based on an EE Cummings poem, and a fine addition to the American school of string mediation started by Samuel Barber's Adagio.

Home Sweet Home

Episode 4

The writer and journalist Madeleine Bunting continues her series with an exploration of a concept that can be both deeply personal and highly political. She reflects on the dramatic new significance 'homeland' took on in the wake of the 9/11 attacks in New York, when President George W Bush created the Department of Homeland Security. And she offers some fascinating glimpses of how indigenous Australians treat their homeland in a way which turns western perceptions of the idea on their head.

Henry Purcell (1659-1695)

An Incomplete Life

Donald Macleod explores what we know of Purcell's own private life alongside some of the last music he wrote.

This week of programmes sets Purcell's work during his short life in the context of the turbulent times in which he lived. This was a period of intense political and social change, encompassing three different monarchies, plague, the Great Fire of London and the arrival of another deadly pandemic.

In the final six years of his life, Purcell wrote music for 42 plays, whilst keeping up a regular output of odes and intimate music for domestic settings. Some of Purcell's most affecting songs were published in his 1693 collection of divine hymns. We also hear the composer with a point to prove on behalf of English musicians in Thomas Betterton's semi-opera The Prophetess. Tragedy struck London once again in 1694 when smallpox swept the capital, killing Queen Mary. A few months after, Purcell himself died, tragically young, aged 36.

Episode 5

In the final episode of her series, the writer and journalist Madeleine Bunting asks what the home of the future may look like. As cyberspace colonises more of our living space, are we in for a dystopian nightmare – one where we have almost no reason to leave our homes because everything we need and care about is there at the touch of a button? Or can new ways of living together give the idea of a cosy and convivial home a new lease of life?

FRI 23:00 Late Junction (m000x7x2)

A Midsummer night's dream session

Verity Sharp presents a dream-inspired collaboration session recorded in person at Maida Vale with Alabaster dePlume, Anrimeal and Tasos Stamou, based on the dreams of the Late Junction listeners.

All through June, we've been exploring the world of dreams in collaboration with the artist Sam Potter and his A.I. dream machine. Using dreams submitted by our listeners, the machine created new communal dream-texts. For the first time in over a year we invite artists back to Maida Vale to collaborate in person using the last batch of dream texts as their inspiration.

Fervent collaborator Alabaster dePlume, aka Manchester's Angus Fairbairn, is a spoken word artist, writer and saxophonist who combines performance poetry with jazz sounds and folk sensibilities. His releases feature contributions from the likes of Sarathy Korwar, Danalogue and Rozi Plain. Anrimeal is the project of songwriter, producer and poet Ana Rita de Melo Alves. Originally from Porto, her 'computer-folk' merges vocals with electric guitar, violin, field recordings and electronics. Greek musician Tasos Stamou is an electroacoustic composer and instrument builder, performing with the likes of Adam Bohman, Steve Beresford and Terry Day.

Elsewhere Verity marks Midsummer night, with some solstice songs for sun-worshipping, as well as doom-electronics from Kampala, rhythmic jazz from Brazil and cello reflections from San Francisco.
