Building an essential library of great recordings with Andrew McGregor and guests

Andrew McGregor is joined by regular contributors to the programme Marina Frolova-Walker, Katy Hamilton and Simon Heighes to discuss and illustrate some of the great recordings with which to start an essential library of classical music. If you want to dip a toe into the world of recorded music, our regular presenter together with three intrepid reviewers suggest some places to start - including a few personal enthusiasms as well as some classics - covering the full range from solo piano to opera; from medieval to modern; from Bach to Beethoven; from Hildegard of Bingen to Amy Beach.

SAT 11:45 Music Matters (m001fnty)
Santtu-Matias Rouvali

Sara Mohr-Pietsch talks to conductor Santtu-Matias Rouvali about his work with the Philharmonia, currently busy with his second season leading the London-based orchestra. He discusses the composers who challenge him when conducting, and tells why humour is so important in his music making.

We take a look at the nature of national anthems and why they're so popular at sports events like the current football World Cup, with an expert on the subject, Dr Ruth Dockett, associate professor of Popular Music at the University of Chester.

Also, we talk to Mary Cohen, co-author of the book Music-Making in U.S. Prisons: Listening to Incarcerated Voices (Wilfrid Laurier University Press, November 2022); to Robin Harris from Finding Rhythms, an organization running song-writing workshops with prisoners in the UK; and to two former inmates who've benefitted from these programmes as part of their process of rehabilitation back into society.

And composer, vocalist and artistic director Laura Bowler, who's just been granted the 2022 Paul Hamlyn Foundation award, given to support artists in their future paths, talks about her projects about climate change and about violence against women, and why working on these subjects has impacted both her physical and mental health.

Producer: Juan Carlos Jaramillo

SAT 12:30 This Classical Life (m001fnv1)
Jess Gillam with... Love Ssega

Jess meets up with Love Ssega to swap some of their favourite music. A founding songwriter and vocalist of Clean Bandit, Love Ssega is hugely in demand for his collaborative work across genres from pop to visual art. He is currently the Philharmonia's artist in residence.

Ssega came with some truly epic Elgar played by Sheku Kanneh Mason, a serious ear worm of an opera chorus by Verdi, and introduced Jess to the incredible voice of Alice Smith (she's been listening to her on loop since). Meanwhile Jess played Ssega Vivaldi arranged by Max Richter, some 12th century vocal music by Hildegard von Bingen, and an elegy to the environment by Marvin Gaye.

PLAYLIST:

MAX RICHTER/VIVALDI: Spring 1 – from the Four Seasons Recomposed [Daniel Hope (violin), Zurich Chamber Orchestra]
VERDI: Va pensiero – Chorus of the Hebrew Slaves (from Nabucco) [Chorus and Orchestra of Royal Opera House, London, Bernard Haitink (cond)]
MARVIN GAYE: Mercy Mercy Me (The Ecology)
ELGAR – Cello Concerto in E minor, op.85 – 1st mvt [Sheku Kanneh Mason (cello), London Symphony Orchestra, Simon Rattle (cond)]
PETER GABRIEL: The Book of Love
WILLIAM MATHIAS: Zodiac Trio, op.70 – 1st mvt 'Pisces' [Dallas Triptych Players]
HILDEGARD von BINGEN: Spiritus Sanctus Vivificans [Armonico Consort, Christopher Monks (dir)]
ALICE SMITH: Wednesday's Child

SAT 13:00 Inside Music (m001fnv5)
Conductor Paavo Järvi with a playlist of grandeur and sweeping melodies.

Paavo Järvi is one of the world's great conductors and he has worked with many leading orchestras around the globe, as well as having made over a hundred recordings. In this programme he draws on his Estonian roots and chooses music by some of that country's finest composers including Tõnu Kõrvits, Erkki-Sven Tüür and Arvo Pärt.

Paavo also discusses the purity of Bruckner's symphonic music, Oscar Peterson's amazing piano licks, and remembers his close friend the pianist Lars Vogt.

Plus Paavo shares a favourite track by Leonard Cohen that encourages everyone to just slow down...

A series in which each week a musician explores a selection of music - from the inside.

BBC Young Jazz Musician Highlights

Julian Joseph presents highlights from the finals of the 2022 BBC Young Jazz Musician competition, featuring pianists Luke Bacchus and Nick Manz, double-bassist Ewan Hastie, guitarist Ralph Porrett and saxophonist Emma Rawicz-Szczerbo.

Also in the programme, we hear from German pianist Julia Hülsmann. Julia often takes inspiration from literary works, in particular poetry, when writing her compositions. Here she shares some of the music that has influenced her, including a fiery rendition of a jazz favourite by Don Grolnick and Quatuor Ébène.

SAT 18:30 Opera on 3 (m001fnvq)
Handel's Alcina

Donald Macleod presents Handel's magical opera from the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, starring Lisette Oropesa as sorceress Alcina and Emily D'Angelo as the bewitched Ruggiero, together with Mary Bevan as Alcina's sister Morgana and Varduhi Abrahamyan as Ruggiero's abandoned wife

Bradamante. Ruggiero is merely the latest in Alcina's long line of conquests: she's turned all her previous lovers into the animals who now populate her enchanted island. But now Bradamante has discovered the island, on a mission to find her lost husband - and so has young Oberto, seeking his father, turned into a lion. Is Alcina's hedonistic reign at last under threat? Find out in this brand new Royal Opera production directed by Richard Jones and conducted by Christian Curnyn.

Donald Macleod's guest in the Radio 3 box is writer and Handel fan Jeanette Winterson.

Acoustic Ecologies

In a programme first broadcast in May, Corey Mwamba presents improvisers drawing inspiration from nature to acoustically explore their environments and the climate crisis.

Instrumentalist, violinist and sound artist, Ruby Colley sent us a track from her new album Overheard. Through field recordings, disembodied voicing and stringed instruments melding classical, folk and improvisational styles, she examines the relationship between humans and their environments through sound. A contemplative reflection on climate awareness through domestic and local life - using sounds from her back garden, to a train depot and a churchyard in a thunderstorm.

Via bustling rhythms and an aerial expansiveness, Glass Canyon Ensemble take inspiration from scientific research on the colours, migratory patterns and songs of birds flying through Chicago. Their album, Collision Theory, compares the activities of birds and humans against the backdrop of the climate crisis. The collective features a range of avant-garde players including cellist Oli Harris, Ben LaMar Gay on flügelhorn and poet Satya who muses, 'Six million citizens/Seven million winged migrations/Whose city is it?'

Elsewhere, a vintage recording from the Glasgow based Scatter Archive record label takes us back to 1994, where the late saxophonist Lol Coxhill and saxophonist Mark Browne filled a village hall in Wiltshire with sounds of freewheeling communion and joy.

The structural engineer and author Roma Agrawal tells Michael Berkeley about her passions for tall buildings, bridges, concrete and Indian classical dance.

Roma Agrawal is a highly successful woman operating in what is still very much a man's world. Her job is, essentially, to make sure that the buildings, bridges, roads and tunnels we use every day don't collapse. She spent six years working out the incredibly complex structure of the spire and foundations of the Shard in London, the tallest building in western Europe.

As well as engineering, Roma has another passion: she tells Michael about her lifelong love of the ancient Bharata Natyam form of Indian Classical Dance, and we hear the first piece of music she danced to as a child in Mumbai. She chooses songs by Abida Parveen, Anoushka Shankar and Nitin Sawhney as well as pieces by Tchaikovsky and by Carl Davis which drew her to Western music.

Roma tells Michael about her campaign to encourage more women to become engineers, why she decided to speak out about the emotional and physical strain of IVF and how working on the Shard helped her overcome her fear of heights.

Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune: Half Man, Half Myth, All Debussy

Tom Service plunges into the heady sound world of Debussy's Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune.

"The flute of the faun brought new breath to the art of music" according to composer Pierre Boulez - how does Debussy do it? A ten-minute piece of music that apparently broke all the existing rules of harmony and yet is as minutely detailed as any miniature.

And what do flautists make of the famous opening solo - we hear from principal flute player with the London Symphony Orchestra, Gareth Davies, who demonstrates Debussy's strange magic on a flute of the time.

Material World

The choice between denim and chiffon skirts is the quandary for the young woman who works for a powerful fashion magazine editor in Lauren Weisberger's novel from 2003 The Devil Wears Prada, whilst in Brett Easton Ellis's American Psycho Timothy Price sports a cotton shirt, linen suit, silk tie and leather lace ups. In George Orwell's On Wigan Pier, he writes about new clothes allowing you to "stand on the street corner, indulging in a private daydream of yourself as Clark Gable or Greta Garbo". Today's Words and Music is like a draper's shop offering poems by John Donne, Cynthia Miller and Mark Doty. There's music written by Saint-Saëns inspired by the story of Le Rouet d'Omphale, an episode in the story of Hercules when he was condemned by Apollo to spend three years disguised as a woman spinning wool for Omphale and William Grant Still's orchestration of Florence Price's Dances in the Canebrakes, a thicket of tall cane plants found in the cotton producing regions of the American South. Bobby Vinton croons about Blue Velvet, Lana Del Rey about blue jeans, and Celine Byrne performs the aria "mi chiamano Mimi" from La Bohème, Puccini's opera about a seamstress and her artist friends in 1830s Paris. Kim Addonizio declares that what women really want is a tight red dress while Jane Eyre eschews a symphony of silks. Strauss brings music to Moliere's satire Le bourgeois gentilhomme and Madonna declares we are living in a Material World.

Dying Embers: The UK's last Coal-Fired Power Stations

The UK's last remaining coal-fired power stations are about to close, bringing to an end our use of coal to produce our electricity. West Burton is one of the last coal-fired power stations still generating electricity, and Andrew Carter was able to record a soundscape there before it fell silent for ever.

West Burton was originally planned to close in September 2022, but the invasion of Ukraine by Russia has extended its operations until the spring of 2023 to help with the energy crisis.

Andrew's late father was a mechanical engineer, and he was involved in the power construction industry in the 60s, and fifty years ago he took Andrew around Cottam power station – which is just up the road from West Burton – and as you can imagine that tour around the plant left a big impression on an eight-year-old.

As luck would have it, when Andrew was recording at West Burton, he was able to go to Cottam, which is in the process of being demolished, and he walked again in his father's footsteps. It brought back a lot of poignant memories.

This soundscape in an operating and disused coal-fired power station is Andrew's homage to his father, before these cathedrals of power are reduced to rubble, capturing, before it's too late, the sounds that would otherwise be lost to history.

A BBC Radio Cumbria production, produced by Andrew Carter

Deeds and Words

'What's worth more, art or life?' These were the words of Just Stop Oil's protestors as they doused Van Gogh's Sunflowers with what appeared to be cream of tomato soup this October.

But as Dr Diarmuid Hester argues in this programme, activists as far back as the suffrage movement have understood that it needn't be either or. In this programme he visits Smallhythe Place in Kent to learn more about the radical life of Edith Craig, a pioneer of suffrage theatre with a personal life as unconventional as her creative one. He meets Susannah Mayor, House and Collections Officer at the home that Edith shared with her two female lovers to find out more about her domestic setup. He also speaks to Edith's biographer Professor Katharine Cockin, and to Lucy Ellinson, an actress and performer equally comfortable on stage with the RSC, as creating theatre on demonstrations, to find out how relevant Craig's ideas remain today.

Rodgers and Hart and Hammerstein

By Sarah Wooley.

Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein had one of the most famous musical partnerships of the 20th century – creating THE SOUND OF MUSIC and OKLAHOMA! But before Rodgers and Hammerstein, there was Rodgers and Hart.

With a string of hits to their name, Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart were the kings of Broadway. But by Christmas 1940, the strain was starting to show.

Award-winning writer Sarah Wooley (VICTIM, THE NATIONAL) tells the tumultuous story of the unravelling of one partnership and the birth of another.

Starring Jamie Parker (HARRY POTTER AND THE CURSED CHILD, THE HISTORY BOYS).

In this episode Keelan talks about how the piano became fashionable in people's homes in the 18th century - what would a Jane Austen adaptation be without a Bennett sister playing some Mozart on a piano? He will also look into the different styles in music written for the piano as it progressed technically, finishing with Beethoven, whose innovations pushed the instrument into completely new spheres.

 César Franck (1822-1890)

A musical puzzle

Donald Macleod explores how César Franck, who was known for being retiring and unassuming, became a leading figure of French musical life.

It seems as if Franck's diffident character positively hindered his advancement. He wasn't interested in moving in glamorous social circles, and lived, according to one visitor who called on him the year before he died, "like a monk". This natural reticence may be why the composer of popular works such as the Violin Sonata, the Piano Quintet, a ground-breaking String Quartet and the glorious Symphony in D found that all too often his critics were quick to find fault and were slow to recognise his worth. He had some disappointments to bear, in an age when opera was thriving, none of his four operas saw the light of day in his lifetime. Recognition for his two major choral works, La Rédemption and Les Béatitudes was to come after his death in 1890 at the age of 67.

Franck did enjoy some support. Early on, Liszt recognised his talent and did his best to help him get his work performed, and later on a band of his pupils, among them the composer Vincent d'Indy did their best to promote their beloved teacher's music.

To mark the 200th anniversary of Franck's birth, Donald Macleod spends the week delving a bit deeper into this enigmatic and complex character from his early compositions which pay homage to Liszt and the pianistic tradition of Hummel, to the wonderfully vivid pictorial canvas of Le Chasseur maudit.

Mozart: Piano Concerto No. 10 in E flat for Two Pianos, K. 365

Interval:

Mahler: Symphony No. 1 in D ('Titan')

Martha Argerich, piano
Maria João Pires, piano
Orchestre de la Suisse Romande
Daniel Harding, conductor

Concert recorded December 16, 2021.

Two of the greatest pianists of our time, Martha Argerich and Maria João Pires, collaborate in the delightful double concerto which Mozart wrote in 1779, probably to play with his sister Nannerl. After the interval, the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande plays Mahler's First Symphony, another product of youth, but nevertheless - like the Mozart - stylistically fully-formed.

Ólafur Arnalds

Soothing music for sleep feat. Dominic Monaghan

Join Icelandic composer and pianist Ólafur Arnalds for another hour-long musical journey seeking out that elusive feeling of calm.

In this episode, Ólafur takes us on a sleepy sonic journey to the land of nod, with a selection of dreamy music. He shares music from Brambles, Debussy and Sigur Ros, and reflects on his own relationship with sleep as well as the curious nature of Icelandic lullabies.

Plus, the actor Dominic Monaghan transports us to his Safe

Haven, the place where he feels the most calm, with recordings and reflections from his garden.

César Franck (1822-1890)

Escape

Donald Macleod recounts how Franck broke free of his father's shackles to find love and marriage in the face of the 1848 revolution.

It seems as if Franck's diffident character positively hindered his advancement. He wasn't interested in moving in glamorous social circles, and lived, according to one visitor who called on him the year before he died, "like a monk". This natural reticence may be why the composer of popular works such as the Violin Sonata, the Piano Quintet, a ground-breaking String Quartet and the glorious Symphony in D found that all too often his critics were quick to find fault and were slow to recognise his worth. He had some disappointments to bear, in an age when opera was thriving, none of his four operas saw the light of day in his lifetime. Recognition for his two major choral works, La Rédemption and Les Béatitudes was to come after his death in 1890 at the age of 67.

Franck did enjoy some support. Early on, Liszt recognised his talent and did his best to help him get his work performed, and later on a band of his pupils, among them the composer Vincent d'Indy did their best to promote their beloved teacher's music.

To mark the 200th anniversary of Franck's birth, Donald Macleod spends the week delving a bit deeper into this enigmatic and complex character from his early compositions which pay homage to Liszt and the pianistic tradition of Hummel, to the wonderfully vivid pictorial canvas of Le Chasseur maudit.

While many artists fled Paris, even with civil unrest occurring on his doorstep, Franck decided to remain in the capital city. In 1851 he encountered the brand new Cavallé-Coll organ, an instrument that led Franck to declare excitedly, "my new organ... it's an orchestra!".

Landscapes in Sound

Sir Simon Rattle conducts music in which vast landscapes merge with the human soul: Sibelius tone poems and Bruckner's radiant Seventh Symphony.

Bruckner said that the beginning of his Seventh Symphony came to him in a dream, played by an angel. This huge, glowing mountain range of sound is basically soul music by any other name. Far away in Finland, meanwhile, Sibelius was thinking big too. Whether it's the sun dancing on the Mediterranean Sea, or the forests of the far north, you can practically feel the freshness in the air.

Sir Simon Rattle has been conducting Sibelius since he was a teenager, making him an unrivalled guide through this untamed musical landscape. And conducting Bruckner, says Rattle, is a lifelong quest for some 'extraordinary vista, some wonderful moment which leads you out of this world'.

'It moved me to tears. For a long time afterwards I was completely transported... what a strangely profound spirit.' – Sibelius on the music of Bruckner

Recorded at Barbican Hall in London and presented by Martin Handley.

César Franck (1822-1890)

Theatrical hopes

Donald Macleod follows César Franck's activities during the Siege of Paris and its aftermath, ranging from coal carrier to opera composer

It seems as if Franck's diffident character positively hindered his advancement. He wasn't interested in moving in glamorous social circles, and lived, according to one visitor who called on him the year before he died, "like a monk". This natural reticence may be why the composer of popular works such as the Violin Sonata, the Piano Quintet, a ground-breaking String Quartet and the glorious Symphony in D found that all to often his critics were quick to find fault and were slow to recognise his worth. Despite the privations caused by years of civil unrest, arts and culture did find some outlets in Paris. In 1879 Franck created a domestic drama and a public stir with the production of his brilliant piano quintet.

Presented by Tom McKinney

Leslie Suganandarajah joins the BBC Philharmonic for a programme that explores desire, grief and hope. We witness a pact with the devil in Emilie Mayer's Faust Overture, before mezzo-soprano Christa Mayer joins the orchestra for a performance of Gustav Mahler's grief-stricken Kindertotenlieder. Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony, his last, (Pathétique) ends the programme, the fullest expression of a profoundly emotional man's turbulence is shared with us through his music.

César Franck (1822-1890)

Father Franck

Donald Macleod examines Franck's unorthodox methods and why he was to become such a revered teacher.

It seems as if Franck's diffident character positively hindered his advancement. He wasn't interested in moving in glamorous social circles, and lived, according to one visitor who called on him the year before he died, "like a monk". This natural reticence may be why the composer of popular works such as the Violin Sonata, the Piano Quintet, a ground-breaking String Quartet and the glorious Symphony in D found that all too often his critics were quick to find fault and were slow to recognise his worth. He had some disappointments to bear, in an age when opera was thriving, none of his four operas saw the light of day in his lifetime. Recognition for his two major choral works, La Rédemption and Les Béatitudes was to come after his death in 1890 at the age of 67.

Franck did enjoy some support. Early on, Liszt recognised his talent and did his best to help him get his work performed, and later on a band of his pupils, among them the composer Vincent d'Indy did their best to promote their beloved teacher's music.

To mark the 200th anniversary of Franck's birth, Donald Macleod spends the week delving a bit deeper into this enigmatic and complex character from his early compositions which pay homage to Liszt and the pianistic tradition of Hummel, to the wonderfully vivid pictorial canvas of Le Chasseur maudit.

In 1872 his old professor of organ at the Paris Conservatoire retired after 53 years in the post. When Franck was appointed, no-one was more surprised than himself!

BBC Singers with Abel Selaocoe

The BBC Singers are joined by their newly titled Artist in Association, the South African cellist Abel Selaocoe, to perform Sofia Gubaidulina's mystical Cantic of the Sun. Originally dedicated to Mstislav Rostropovich who died 25 years ago this year, Cantic of the Sun is a setting of St Francis of Assisi's prayer to the natural world, calling for dazzling virtuosity from cellist and choir alike, and a masterpiece of the late 20th-century repertoire.

Followed by Rachmaninov's magnificent setting of texts from the All Night Vigil ceremony – also known as the 'Vespers' – which draws on the chant and bells of Russian Orthodox worship to create a masterpiece of choral a cappella music, described as the 'greatest musical achievement of the Russian Orthodox church'.

Presented by Ian Skelly, recorded at Kings Place in London.

The golden years

Donald Macleod sees Franck approaching his sixties firing on all cylinders, producing a succession of his most original and enduring works.

It seems as if Franck's diffident character positively hindered his advancement. He wasn't interested in moving in glamorous social circles, and lived, according to one visitor who called on him the year before he died, "like a monk". This natural reticence may be why the composer of popular works such as the Violin Sonata, the Piano Quintet, a ground-breaking String Quartet and the glorious Symphony in D found that all too often his critics were quick to find fault and were slow to recognise his worth. Innocence and Experience

A Mixtape inspired by the theme of innocence and experience from William Blake's collection of poems of the same name. We begin with a demonic Mephisto Waltz and end with the peaceful innocence of Arvo Pärt's Spiegel im Spiegel. Two of the works feature words by Blake himself - Speke, from an album by Michael Price called Tender Symmetry, and The Lamb in a gorgeous setting by Sir John Tavener. There's music from Bernard Herrmann's classic score for Taxi Driver. We hear part of Purcell's incidental music for Distressed Innocence (or the Princess of Persia), Verdi's song La seduzione, and a short extract from Shostakovich's Lady Macbeth.

The Lark Ascending

The BBC Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Clemens Schuldt, and violinist Jennifer Pike pair Vaughan Williams's icon with a Deborah Pritchard premiere inspired by east-European larks.

In the shadow of the First World War, Vaughan Williams's The Lark Ascending sounded like a vision of peace. Deborah Pritchard's Calandra evokes the same spirit in a 21st century context; it's specially written for the radiant tone and poetic insight of soloist Jennifer Pike.

Calandra, says Pritchard represents a different kind of lark – "an Eastern European lark, symbolic of freedom, ascending without borders". Like Vaughan Williams, Pritchard is responding to her time; but music can deal with turbulence as well as serenity and guest conductor Clemens Schuldt frames these two idylls with Britten's volcanic Sinfonia da Requiem – a protest against the inhumanity of World War Two – and Strauss's musical fantasy of triumph rising from the darkest tragedy. Strong emotions; ravishing sounds.

Ghost Writers

Ian McMillan explores the ghostly presences and phantoms of predecessors, literary or not, which hover in and around all writing. In poetry and stories how do we seek through the spectres of time and memory to conjure invocations of people lost to us, and to understand the importance of human connections through time and space? With David Constantine, Denise Riley, Andrew Taylor and Clare Shaw. David Constantine's new book Rivers of the Unspoilt World interweaves fictional characters and events with the real to create new ways of seeing and connecting our past, present and possible futures. Denise Riley's latest collection Lurex is a meditation on the timelessness of time, in which the past is never really past but is both then and now, haunting, our memories and our futures. Andrew Taylor's collection Northangerland conjures the ghost of Bramwell Bronte to rewrite his poetry for the modern reader. Clare Shaw's Towards A General Theory of Love seeks to summon the Spirit of those we have loved and lost.

Music for hibernation and déjà-vu

Jennifer Lucy Allan gets ready for the winter with an eclectic selection of tracks to keep the spirits warm and hibernatory music that conjures up illusions of memory. The selections include oneiric melodies from Carla Del Forno's latest album and Jonathan Scherk's sampled-elica, perception-warping manipulations of audio samples and found sounds that bring about déjà-vu. That bring about déjà-vu.

Elsewhere in the show, the unconscious is projected onto resonating strings in the form of American primitive guitar music recorded in a book warehouse by Czech duo Šimanský and Niesner, and magic and echoes from legendary folk artist Buffy Saint-Marie singing a Leonard Cohen poem. Plus "digital ventriloquism" from Turin, courtesy of Señor Service, and a mind trip from Japanese psychedelic pioneers, The Jacks.
