

SATURDAY 18 MARCH 2023SAT 01:00 Composed (m001jy33)

Composed with Devonté Hynes

INFLUENCES: The music that inspires me

Devonté Hynes explores the powerful, evolving sounds of classical music, with playlists from across the musical spectrum.

In the first episode of the series, Devonté explores some of the music that's helped shape him as an artist and composer.

His selection includes Bach, Shostakovich, Missy Mazzoli, Arthur Russell and Alice Coltrane.

10.30am Building a Library: Kenneth Hamilton on Chopin's Piano Concerto No 2 in F minor

Frédéric Chopin composed this glorious concerto in 1829 when he was 20 and before he had finished his formal education. It was first performed in Warsaw, with the composer as soloist. It was actually the first of his two piano concertos to be written. Like all Chopin's works, it is full of haunting melodies and thrilling piano writing. The nocturnal middle movement in particular is a golden moment, inspired by Chopin's romantic idolization of Konstancja Gładkowska.

Jess Gillam with... Laura van der Heijden

Jess is joined by the cellist Laura van der Heijden to share some of their favourite musical discoveries, including JS Bach interpreted by the Lodestar Trio, music from Philip Glass's Book of Longing, a track from the trumpeter Ibrahim Maalouf and Elena Urioste playing Samuel Coleridge-Taylor.

SAT 13:00 Inside Music (m0012gf0)

Baritone Peter Brathwaite with profound and joyful sounds

Baritone Peter Brathwaite invites us to listen to some of his personal discoveries - from a melancholic Romanian Doina he first heard while working on a show at the Royal Opera House, to Warlock's Bethlehem Down which he recorded during his gap year.

He also finds unusual sonorities in Jessie Montgomery's piece 'Woods' as a violin and a bass are hit and plucked to create a creaking treescape, and enjoys voices ranging from the silvery tones of Iestyn Davies to the masterful portrayal of multiple characters in one short song performed by Willard White.

Plus, he celebrates the Metropolitan Opera debut of Marian Anderson, the first black singer to perform there.

A series in which each week a musician explores a selection of music - from the inside.

Terri Lyne Carrington in concert

Julian Joseph presents concert highlights from drummer, composer and educator Terri Lyne Carrington performing music from her Grammy-winning album 'New Standards Vol.1' live at San Francisco's SFJazz Centre. An internationally renowned musician, Terri Lyne has worked with everyone from Dizzy Gillespie and Stan Getz, to Herbie Hancock and Angélique Kidjo. She has won four Grammys and continues to champion the importance of challenging gender disparities within music. Her New Standards project was created to celebrate women composers, bringing fresh offerings to the male-dominated jazz canon.

For this concert, her band featured jazz heavyweights Michael Mayo on vocals, Etienne Charles on trumpet, Matthew Stevens on guitar, Kris Davis on piano and Linda May Han Oh on bass.

SAT 18:00 Opera on 3 (m001k17k)
Wagner's Lohengrin

Wagner's Lohengrin, with a stellar cast led by tenor Piotr Beczala in the title role and the soprano Tamara Wilson as Elsa von Brabant.

Based on a German medieval romance, the noble and pure knight Lohengrin is sent to defend and protect Elsa, and as the couple fall madly in love, a dark conspiracy based on treason and jealousy threatens to undermine them, with tragic consequences. Wagner named Lohengrin a 'Romantic opera', and significantly he developed on it his first attempts to write a through-composed music drama, innovating the genre and changing it forever.

Presented by Debra Lew Harder, in conversation with Ira Siff.

Shadows and Silence

Corey Mwamba presents the best in new improvised music.

As a part of a live performance that took place at the Sharmanka Kinetic Theatre in Glasgow - an emporium of whirring sounds and kinetic machinery - the cellist and sound artist Semay Wu weaves a sensory world of electronic connectivity. In collaboration with John Cavanagh, Wu improvises with the theatre's machines alongside collected recordings for a mesmerising performance meditating on space, time and movement. Plus, drummer Sebastian Rochford and pianist Kit Downes team up for a minimalist dialogue between their instruments, where reverberating silences create a loaded atmosphere of suggestion and release.

Elsewhere, electronic improviser Chunyang Yao uses vocal distortions and drones to recreate the ominous sight and sound of crows circling over seas and empty streets in Tomakomai, Japan.

Helena Kennedy

Helena Kennedy is one of Britain's most distinguished lawyers. Brought up in a Glasgow tenement flat, she was the first in her family to go to university. But instead of going to Glasgow University to read English and becoming a teacher, as they expected, she startled everyone by travelling to London - to study for the Bar. Some of her friends misunderstood and thought she'd gone south to find bar work. This was the end of the sixties, a time when there were extremely few women barristers. Since then, her ambition, fierce intelligence and considerable charm have taken her right to the top, and she now sits in the House of Lords as Baroness Kennedy of the Shaws. She created a huge stir when she published her first book, Eve was Framed, in 1992 - a shocking examination of how the criminal justice system fails women. Three years ago, she felt so little had changed that she published a sequel - in a book with the title Misjustice. Helena Kennedy campaigns now too on wider human rights issues, such as the persecution and murder of women in Iran and the shocking genocide of the Uighurs in China.

In conversation with Michael Berkeley, Helena Kennedy looks back to the childhood which has been so influential on her campaigns for justice, and chooses the music which has sustained her through a series of difficult and high-profile cases. Her playlist includes Handel, Bach, Schubert, George Benjamin, James MacMillan, and her favourite Puccini opera, with Mimi's famous aria from La Boheme.

The 1920s

From the Harlem Renaissance and the world of the Charleston, the Great Gatsby and the discovery of Tutankhamun's tomb to the financial crash at the end of the decade. Today's programme hears readings by Adjoa Andoh and Guy Burgess of poems and prose by authors including Langston Hughes, Virginia Woolf and Jean Toomer with music by Duke Ellington and Bessie Smith, Ravel and Vaughan Williams.

The 1920s were known variously as the Roaring Twenties, the Golden Twenties, the Jazz Age and the Flapper Era. It was also the decade of the Wall Street Crash, the discovery of Tutankhamen's tomb, the first talking pictures and dance crazes like the Charleston and the samba. In many ways it was a period of transition from the pre-First World War order to a more recognisably modern age. Words and Music reflects this change in the novels, poetry, songs and compositions from a century or so ago. There are readings from the fiction of F Scott Fitzgerald, Rosamund Lehman, Richmal Crompton and Virginia Woolf, verse from TS Eliot, Frances Cornford, Thomas Hardy, Edith Sitwell and poets of the Harlem Renaissance while the music ranges from Poulenc and Puccini to Gershwin, Ellington and Bessie Smith, from Ravel and Nadia Boulanger to Weill and Vaughan Williams via Louis Armstrong and Carmen Miranda.

SUN 18:45 Sunday Feature (m001k184)

X-Ray Vision: Rudolph Fisher in Harlem

Lindsay Johns explores the enduring relevance of Rudolph Fisher, a writer whose musicality reflected the birth of jazz and blues, and a pioneer of Black detective fiction. Travelling to Harlem, the New York neighbourhood which has for close to a century been, as he puts it, "the spiritual mecca of Black America", Lindsay makes the case for Fisher's writing, and argues that he deserves to be read today.

Speaking to Fisher scholars, to his granddaughter Laurel, and to influential writers and creators like Ishmael Reed, Gary Phillips, and Cheo Hodari Coker, Lindsay examines how Fisher found a way to portray the diversity of urban Black America at a time when it was rapidly expanding. And he considers Fisher's legacy in another field with enduring relevance - the liminal position of the Black police officer.

The Dance of Death

Conor McPherson's darkly comic version of August Strindberg's classic about a toxic marriage.

Set in a military outpost off the coast of Sweden, the Captain and his wife Alice embark on a series of spiteful games in an attempt to alleviate the hell they've created for themselves. Events take a new and disturbing turn when Kurt, a divisive

A Leader is Made

When does an agile, collaborative chamber ensemble become an orchestra on the run, charging for the finish line? There's no doubt that the best orchestras can play without a conductor, but where do they find the spontaneity, fire and focus when the podium is empty? Ben explores the possibilities and pitfalls that are created by ensembles who work without a conductor.

As a tuba player himself, Ben also considers how a conductor's chosen instrument influences their style on the podium and their understanding of the score.

Georges Bizet (1838-1875)

Great Expectations

The musical circles of Paris are astounded by a brilliant young talent. Plus, Donald Macleod introduces us to Carmen, Bizet's most feted operatic creation.

Georges Bizet's story ought to have been a very straightforward one. It was clear to everyone who met him just how brilliantly and excitingly talented he was. He was also fortunate to live and work in Paris, a city laden with musical opportunities in the mid-19th century. This week, Donald Macleod shows how Bizet's life proved more challenging and event-filled than anyone might have expected - and that success can never be guaranteed!

Throughout the week, Donald also guides us through Bizet's most celebrated work, Carmen - an opera famous for its Spanish heat, fractured passions and fabulous tunes.

Today, we see how Bizet's talent quickly transported him from middle-class obscurity into Paris's most elevated musical circles. Plus, in our first encounter with Carmen, we're introduced to the title character: a fiery gypsy girl who bewitches all around her, yet who declares she cares nothing for love.

Francesca Dego and Alessio Bax

Italian violinist Francesca Dego is joined by her compatriot Alessio Bax, in a recital featuring Mozart's Violin Sonata in B flat K454, written for violin virtuoso Regina Strinasacchi of Mantua for a concert in Vienna in 1784. At this premiere, although Mozart had the piano part securely in his head, he did not give himself enough time to write it out, and so he performed it with a sheet of blank music paper in front of him in order to fool the audience. This sonata is coupled with the autumnal nostalgia of Brahms' First Violin Sonata, inspired by a musical idea from one of Brahms' own songs, 'Regenlied' ('Rain Song') and consequently sometimes referred to as the 'Rain Sonata'.

MON 22:45 The Essay (m000n97w)
Thinking Black

Peter Fryer

'There were Africans in Britain before the English came here.' So begins the book 'Staying Power', the first comprehensive history of black people in Britain. Its publication in 1984 caused great controversy because its author, Peter Fryer, was white. Some argued it wasn't his place to tell their story. Anticipating this, Fryer had written in the preface that he would make every effort to "'think black' - to grasp imaginatively as well as intellectually the essence of the black historical experience." But it was felt by some not to be enough.

'Thinking Black' is a series of personal essays in which the writer Colin Grant explores the fascinating stories of five individuals who have each attempted, in one way or another, to transcend or challenge the boundary of race.

In this first essay, Colin asks whether it is appropriate for a white author to write black history or whether it's simply appropriation. Does empathy have a place in the writing of history? Peter Fryer's empathetic skill is clear in his writing, so does this help justify his authorship, especially in the absence of any other written history? Colin Grant examines these questions, the book 'Staying Power' itself and the life of its author.

Georges Bizet (1838-1875)

Roman Holiday

Bizet's naive hero, Don José, falls under Carmen's alluring spell.
With Donald Macleod.

Georges Bizet's story ought to have been a very straightforward one. It was clear to everyone who met him just how brilliantly and excitingly talented he was. He was also fortunate to live and work in Paris, a city laden with musical opportunities in the mid-19th century. This week, Donald Macleod shows how Bizet's life proved more challenging and event-filled than anyone might have expected – and that success can never be guaranteed!

Throughout the week, Donald also guides us through Bizet's
most celebrated work, Carmen – an opera famous for its Spanish heat, fractured passions and fabulous tunes.

Today, Donald follows Bizet to Rome where, living way from home for the first time, he's determined to gorge himself on all the many pleasures that Italy has to offer a young man. Plus we reach the second part of Carmen's Act 1: Corporal Don José plans to marry his sweetheart, but he finds himself unable to resist when the gypsy temptress, Carmen, demands his allegiance.

Pekka Kuusisto directs the SCO in music by Nico Muhly, Britten and Haydn

Renowned violinist and conductor Pekka Kuusisto directs the Scottish Chamber Orchestra and acclaimed tenor Allan Clayton in a performance recorded at Glasgow's City Halls. Presented by Stephen Broad.

Surreal French poetry weaves through Benjamin Britten's work for tenor and orchestra as he sets words by Arthur Rimbaud depicting castles made of bone and howling moons and Nico Muhly keeps us in a fantasy world using Andre Breton's imaginary visions and the many loves of Jaques-Bernard Brunius in his Three Songs for tenor, violin and drones. Before the interval, Haydn's final symphony No. 104 and after it the Scottish premiere of Muhly's violin concerto 'Shrink'. It's a work that 'obsesses over certain musical intervals like ninths and sevenths', performed tonight by its dedicatee Pekka Kuusisto.

Thinking Black

John Howard Griffin

What does it mean to be black?

'Thinking Black' is a series of personal essays in which writer Colin Grant explores the fascinating stories of five individuals who have each attempted, in one way or another, to transcend or challenge the boundary of race.

In this essay, Colin explores black invisibility, interweaving his own experience with the work of John Howard Griffin and his book 'Black Like Me'. A pioneering white journalist in 1950s America with a strong sense of racial injustice, Griffin conceived of a project in which he would disguise himself as an African American in order to be able to write about black experience. Griffin wished to open the eyes of his fellow white Americans in the hope of kindling kinship between the two groups. The experience shocked him, particularly the invisibility he experienced when appearing in front of many white Americans as a newly incarnated black man.

Colin asks how successful this experiential writing can be and explores how virtual reality software has attempted to tackle the same issue today. Are either forms likely to be successful in combating the racist thinking that invisibility often evokes?

Reality Bites

Bizet returns to Paris determined to conquer the city's opera houses. Plus, in Act 2 of Carmen, our heroine seems to be attention. With Donald Macleod.

Georges Bizet's story ought to have been a very

Today, Bizet realises that, if he's going to make it as an opera composer, he'll need to win the approval of Paris's powerful theatre impresarios. He produces what's become one of his most beloved melodies, his Pearl Fishers duet, but will it impress the right people? Plus, we reach Act 2 of Carmen and

Thinking Black

Bert Williams

When it comes to blackness, what are society's expectations?

Writer Colin Grant examines this question, interweaving his own experience growing up in Luton with the story of Bert Williams, a black vaudevillian in early 20th-century America.

A gifted, intelligent comedian, Williams was forced to further 'black up' and performatively dumb down to meet the expectations of the white audiences and theatre producers of the day. His talent was extraordinary, and he went on to become the highest paid entertainer in America. But was it too big a price to pay for success?

Colin Grant looks at Bert Williams's place in the history of minstrelsy and explores whether Williams's experience shares common ground with the gangsta rappers - and ordinary black people - of today.

Georges Bizet (1838-1875)

Love and War

Bizet falls in love and enlists as a soldier. Meanwhile, in Act 3 of Carmen, love turns to regret and recrimination. Presented by Donald Macleod.

Georges Bizet's story ought to have been a very straightforward one. It was clear to everyone who met him just how brilliantly and excitingly talented he was. He was also fortunate to live and work in Paris, a city laden with musical opportunities in the mid-19th century. This week, Donald Macleod shows how Bizet's life proved more challenging and event-filled than anyone might have expected - and that success can never be guaranteed!

Throughout the week, Donald also guides us through Bizet's
most celebrated work, Carmen - an opera famous for its Spanish heat, fractured passions and fabulous tunes.

Today, Bizet decides he's ready to marry. The Prussians march towards Paris and he joins the army. In Act 3 of Carmen, corporal Don José has deserted his post to follow Carmen and her smuggler friends into the mountains. Carmen is quickly tiring of José's attentions, and she's filled with foreboding after seeking their fortune in the tarot cards.

Belfast Music Society International Festival of Chamber Music 2023 (3/4)

John Toal presents the third in our series of recitals from this year's Belfast Music Society International Festival of Chamber Music, performed in the Great Hall at Queen's University, Belfast.

In today's recital we begin with Franz Liszt's Ballade No.2 performed by Belfast-born pianist Michael McHale, followed by two works by Mahler, that is to say Gustav and Alma Mahler. The first, by Gustav, his Lieder eines Fahrenden Gesellen "Songs of a Wayfarer" is a collection of songs with words by the composer written around 1884 and influenced by the texts of German folk poetry. This is followed by Alma Mahler's Fünf Lieder- a collection of five songs written between 1899-1910 and published around a year later.

To round off today's recital, pianist Michael McHale returns to the stage with Schubert's Impromptu op.90 no.4.

BBC NOW perform Tansy Davies, Sibelius and Tchaikovsky

The BBC National Orchestra of Wales and their principal conductor Ryan Bancroft travel to Aberystwyth to perform Tchaikovsky, Sibelius and Tansy Davies. The concert opens with Monolith, a work for percussion and strings that Davies wrote for the 2021 Aldeburgh Festival. It takes inspiration from Claude Cahun's photograph titled I extend my arms, which depicts disembodied arms extending from a monolithic stone. Before the interval, violinist Clara-Jumi Kang joins Bancroft and his Orchestra for Sibelius' much loved Violin Concerto - the composer's beautiful love song to the instrument he had so dearly longed to be a virtuoso on. The concert concludes with Tchaikovsky's 5th Symphony, considered by many to be the composer's statement on fate and destiny, and one of his most popular compositions.

Recorded on the 16th of March, and presented by Nicola Heywood Thomas.

THU 22:45 The Essay (m000n9dm)

Thinking Black

Sandra Laing

The tragic story of Sandra Laing - born in apartheid South Africa to white parents but with an appearance that suggested she was not white - forms the backdrop of writer Colin Grant's exploration of racial passing: pretending to be part of a racial group other than your own.

Laing's story involved being racially reclassified by the South African state four times and includes her having to pass as a coloured woman, which to the best of her knowledge, she was not. Colin considers what it means to 'pass' and the associated absurdity of an imposed taxonomy of race.

Colin examines other examples of passing in history and asks whether it should always be seen as a betrayal when someone pretends to be white when in fact they aren't. What are the consequences for the individual - and for the race they try to deny?

This personal essay is one of five in the series 'Thinking Black' in which Colin Grant tells the fascinating stories of individuals who have each experienced or challenged the boundaries of race. He interweaves these lives with his own experiences and in so doing explores the nuances of some of the complex issues underlying the current debate around race and identity.

Realms of drone

Elizabeth Alker takes us on a journey through sustained notes and uninterrupted tones in a homage to some of our favourite drones from ambient, electronic and orchestral realms. Amongst the selections are the haunting music of Japanese sound sculptor and 'signal alchemist' Sawako, the sombre viola dissonance of John Cale's Velvet Underground, as well as a performance from Manchester Collective of the second movement of Edmund Finnis' first string quartet. Plus there's an excerpt from a two-hour drone ritual by Sweden's Kali Malone in the company of Stephen O'Malley on electric guitar and Lucy Railton on cello; as well as dense textures courtesy of M-G Dysfunction from the Leeds label Don't Drone Alone.

Polar Bear presents a brand new commission for our series celebrating the BBC's centenary ('Something Old, Something New') which includes the sounds of his childhood home, John McAuliffe shares poems of deep sighs and his work inspired by the experiences of organ donors and recipients, Jay Griffiths lets us into the way our fellow creatures take pleasure in sound and the importance of wild sound to humans, and Shirley May explores the importance of breath in her work, and the role of the body in performance - something she teaches as artistic director of 'Young Identity' - the youth spoken word collective.

Thinking Black

Michael Manley

Who is and isn't black? What, in fact, is 'black'? Who gets to decide?

Writer Colin Grant examines the life of Jamaican politician Michael Manley and the extraordinary socio-cultural context of Jamaica as it emerged from colonial rule. Using Manley's story, Colin explores the criteria by which we judge 'blackness' and argues that there's a much more nuanced approach required than the one usually employed. Colin draws on Manley's life to argue that it is perfectly possible to be white-skinned and black.

This is the last essay in the series 'Thinking Black' in which Colin explores the fascinating stories of five individuals who have each experienced or challenged the boundaries of race. He interweaves these lives with his own experiences and explores the complexity of some of the issues underlying the current debate around race and identity.

Forecasts and oracles

100 years ago the weather forecast became a daily radio broadcast. Late Junction offers up an esoteric collection of sound and music that forewarns, divines and predicts.

Jennifer Lucy Allan shares tracks that celebrate the occult myths - and the science - behind predictions. Expect sounds and visions from the Ethereal Transects compilation, an exploration of the folklore behind celestial objects, as well as Psych-prog rock from Yorkshire's The Accent, who offer musical enquiries into the meaning of a red sky at night. Plus, traditional ahwash music from the Amazigh people of Morocco, whose performers are often considered clairvoyant, and, just possibly, an appearance from the iconic BBC Weather presenter Michael (Hurricane!) Fish.

Elsewhere in the show, a track from Peloto Cabras Mulusa Olve - the new record by Argentinian experimental band Reynolds - plus a galloping piece from the debut album of Turkish artist Elif Yalvaç, which she created in collaboration with artists encountered on her travels around the world.
