Composed with Devonté Hynes

Influences II: More of the Music that Inspires Me

Devonté Hynes explores the powerful, evolving sounds of classical music, with playlists drawn from across the musical spectrum.

In this second selection of influences, Devonté shares more of the music that's helped make him the artist and composer he is today, scoring film and television, and recording as Blood Orange.

The playlist includes Philip Glass, Dmitri Shostakovich, Angel Bat Dawid and Anne Anne Müller. Not to mention one of his favourite songs of all time, Malcolm McLaren's Madame Butterfly, which spurs him on creatively.

Nao and Pauli Lovejoy explore how meditation can help you start the day right and welcome in some positive vibes to boost your mood. Pauli Lovejoy is a drummer, composer, producer, musical director and founder of Flybrations - a radio show on AMP, a wellness day festival and more. In this episode he shares his top tips for seizing the day right from the beginning.

The music that soundtracks Pauli's guided meditation was composed by Hinako Omori and recorded by the BBC Concert Orchestra exclusively for this episode.

Whether you're new to meditation or you've tried it before, this series is the perfect place to pick it up from.

Music you'll hear in this episode includes:

Tárrega: Lágrima
Hinako Omori: asagao
Grieg: Morning from Peer Gynt
Tchaikovsky: Mélodie from Souvenir d'un lieu cher

10.30am Building a Library: Kate Kennedy on Benjamin Britten's Peter Grimes

The opera Peter Grimes is set in a fictional small town that bears some resemblance to Britten's home of Aldeburgh, Suffolk, on England's east coast. It is a drama about outsiders and oppression. As Britten himself said, it was 'a subject very close to my heart – the struggle of the individual against the masses. The more vicious the society, the more vicious the individual.' The score is full of great orchestral descriptions of the Suffolk coast and highly dramatic confrontations.

SAT 11:45 Music Matters (m001kpc2)
Classical music in British society

Tom Service explores classical music's place in British society, in light of the current national debates around funding from Arts Council England and the proposed cuts to the BBC's performing groups. The programme asks questions about how classical music and opera is valued, and how it resonates with today's diverse communities, through perspectives from within the UK and from abroad, from former culture minister Ed Vaizey to multidisciplinary artist Nwando Ebizie.

Richard McKerrow, the producer behind Channel 4's The Piano, on classical music on TV and the impact he hopes the series will have on our musical life.

Sarah Price from Liverpool University, on her research into audiences: why do we return to the familiar when choosing which concerts to attend?

Kully Thiarai, creative director and CEO of Leeds 2023, on the importance of the arts and culture for community and belonging.

Andrew Mellor, a British journalist in Denmark, on the relationship the Nordic countries have with classical music, and why it's different in the UK.

Bobby Duffy from the Policy Institute at King's College London, on how the arts and classical music fit into the culture wars debate.

Nwando Ebizie, the multidisciplinary artist, on working with Aurora Orchestra on "Inside Beethoven" and making events work for D/deaf audiences.

Ed Vaizey, Member of the House of Lords and former culture minister, on perceptions and political decision-making around the arts and music.

Jess Gillam with... Lauri Porra

Jess Gillam's guest today is the Finnish bass player and composer Lauri Porra. The music they've chosen to share with each other includes Mahler's 8th Symphony, Mahler remixed by Fennesz, music for strings by Caroline Shaw and Dobrinka Tabakova, plus tracks by Radiohead and Seikou Keita.

SAT 13:00 Inside Music (m001kpc6)
Bassoonist Sarah Burnett with mystery, metronomes and mutes

Sarah Burnett is Principal Bassoon with the Britten Sinfonia and the London Mozart Players. Her choices today range from a choral piece by Tomás Luis de Victoria whose harmony reflects a mysterious birth to an energetic piece by Jörg Widmann intended to be played at a very particular speed.

The bassoon features in various guises, with music showcasing Sophie Dervaux's beautiful tone at the upper end of the instrument, Sergio Azzolini's mastery of the baroque bassoon, and the instrument sitting alongside its wind colleagues in Poulenc's witty Sextet for piano and winds.

There's also a scene from an opera. Mahler at his most heartbreakingly beautiful, and Duke Ellington teaches us how to swing...

A series in which each week a musician explores a selection of music - from the inside.

Phantasmagoria

Corey Mwamba presents improvised music blurring the lines between worlds.

Led by the indomitable Marshall Allen, we hear a futuristic refashioning of an old myth: The Gordian Knot, a tale stretching back to Alexander the Great, and describing human creativity to overcome a seemingly insurmountable obstacle. Through an ancient-to-future soundscape of flute, shamanic drums, electronic synths and spoken word, this bold quartet unleash an enchanting world of possibility and hope.

In Mexico, the long circular breaths of flautist Camilo Ángeles meet the focused study of Violeta García's cello to create an intoxicating atmosphere, blurring the lines between the corporeal and dream worlds. Elsewhere, saxophonist Ayumi Ishito pulls listeners into an interstellar imaginary. Gauzy layers of electronic experimentation bubble and blink like living organisms, whilst a whistling theremin offers a heady backdrop of ambient escape.

Sarah Walker chooses three hours of attractive and uplifting music to complement your Easter Sunday morning.

Today Sarah plays Howells's Saraband for organ ('for the Morning of Easter'), and Telemann's Easter Oratorio welcomes the day with fanfares, flowing string passages and declamations.

Sarah also finds pianistic brilliance and expression in the cascading lines of Helene de Montgeroult's Etude No.62, and there's beauty in the building tension and release of a Haydn String Quartet.

Plus, Anne Sofie von Otter's voice transports us away from worldly concerns...

Steve Rosenberg

Steve Rosenberg is the BBC's Russia editor.

After studying Russian at university, he moved to Moscow in 1991 and since then has charted the transformation of the country – from the conflict in Chechnya and the Beslan school siege to President Putin's rise to power and the impact of the current war against Ukraine.

His musical passions include - perhaps unsurprisingly - Russian composers such as Rachmaninov, but his choices also draw on childhood memories and the many hours he spent watching TV. Steve is a keen pianist, and he recalls the moment he played for President Gorbachev, who sang Russian songs to his accompaniment. Steve also posts piano improvisations and compositions on social media - anything from Postman Pat in the style of Tchaikovsky to a piece he wrote inspired by birds sitting on a telegraph wire.

Please Mr Lacey, Let Me Work Your Lovely Machine

Bruce Lacey defies categorisation. He painted, made sculptures, films, installations and was a performance artist in the 60s. Roger Law goes in search of an artistic enigma.

Bruce Lacey was born in Catford in 1927. He had a childhood which included visits to the Lewisham Hippodrome where his father enthusiastically took part as a volunteer in the variety acts, and a stint at an explosives factory in Wales during World War II. All these were influences on the young Lacey, who buzzed with a maelstrom of ideas, each notion quickly pushed aside by the next.

By the 1960s he was carving a path in London between entertainment and art, working with Michael Bentine, Peter Cook, and the jazz and satirical musicians Tony and Douglas Gray (The Alberts). But he felt he was falling between two stools. In his own words, 'Show business didn't quite accept me, because they thought I was an eccentric artist, and the art world had disowned me because they thought I was just a crazy performer'.

Later in life Bruce Lacey left London and settled in Norfolk, where Roger Law finds his works in Norwich Castle Museum & Art Gallery. When he died in 2016 he left behind a huge portfolio of creative endeavours, from paintings, films, installations to a giant head you can get inside, now in storage with Glasgow Museums.

Roger Law himself has a distinguished career both as a satirist, famous for television's Spitting Image, and as an artist in his own right. He talks to those who lived and worked with Bruce Lacey to find out how in his various guises he made the extraordinary out of the ordinary.

Bess Loves Porgy

A musical love story for today - radically updating the iconic novella Porgy by Edwin DuBose Heyward (the basis for Gershwin's Porgy and Bess) to modern London.

With specially composed music produced by Mercury Prize-nominated music producer Swindle with the BBC Concert Orchestra, and from a script by Roy Williams OBE.

With resonant, timeless themes and mythical characters, the story of Porgy and his love for Bess transcends generations and is as heart breaking today as when it was written.

Its themes resonate - star-crossed lovers, an embattled community, sacrifice and ultimate redemption, during one hot London summer of passion and violence.

In our version, set in South London today, Porgy is an underground, anonymous grime/rap artist whose life and music are changed for ever when he meets Bess. Their love, and the musical journey they go on together, gives him the courage to shed his anonymity and perform his music openly. Porgy lives with a disability, but this is not a story about disability. It's about falling in love, finding your voice and being true to yourself.

SUN 23:00 Viola: The Unsung Hero (m001kpfz)

The Human Viola

Violist Ruth Gibson explores her instrument's unique voice across three programmes full of intriguing musical choices. The viola may have less solo repertoire than its string siblings, the violin and the cello, and its awkward mid-range sound might be harder for listeners to hear, but Ruth believes it's undoubtedly the unsung hero of orchestras and chamber ensembles. This butt of musical jokes has a long history of being overlooked, and Ruth will be encouraging it into the limelight at last.

In this first episode, she unpicks the viola's human qualities, admiring how composers write for it in ways that highlight the different sides of its personality. Her choices include one of the first viola concertos, film music that makes the most of voices in the middle of the texture, an improvisation featuring a viola d'amore, and an extremely demanding duet for two violas.

There's also a piece by Morton Feldman where the viola's voice adds pathos to a tragic story, and a set of variations by Paganini arranged for viola that brings out the instrument's agility and playfulness.

Ellie Ajao

Uncovering the quirky, peculiar and personal connections that link music through history. Each piece of this half-hour eclectic music sequence is linked to the previous one, through all manner of connections, some tangential, some personal, often surprising.

This new series of three episodes introduces presenter Ellie Ajao, a recent graduate of Royal Holloway, University of London, and a former BBC Open Music trainee. Ellie loves nothing more than talking about music and culture. Keen to make classical music accessible to people from all backgrounds, Ellie's work is centred around uncovering the wonderful music of underrepresented composers.

Ellie's music choices in this second episode include pieces by Imogen Holst, Britten, Shostakovich, Bernstein, Sondheim and Harry Burleigh.

Arthur Sullivan (1842-1900)

An emerging genius

Donald Macleod delves into Arthur Sullivan's early musical inspirations and training.

Sir Arthur Sullivan became the most renowned composer of the Victorian era, with his fame spreading across Europe and America, too. His output spanned many genres including oratorios, a symphony, chamber music, hymns and anthems, but it was for his collaboration with the librettist W.S. Gilbert on operettas that he is best remembered today. He was a personal friend to royalty, and he was knighted when he was in his early 40s. He also had a liking for playing cards, buying race horses and gambling, frequently losing the substantial earnings from the stage works he'd composed. Sullivan became a pillar of the British musical establishment, so when he died, despite wanting to be buried with his family in Brompton Cemetery, he was laid to rest in the crypt of St Paul's Cathedral, with an additional service at the Chapel Royal in St. James's Palace.

Sullivan caught the music bug early on in his life, inspired by the military marches he heard living with his family at Sandhurst where his father was a bandsman at the Royal Military College. The Sandhurst parish church also had a huge impact upon the boy, with its congregational singing, and he was soon composing anthems. At the age of 12, Sullivan was accepted as a chorister to the Chapel Royal, and within a few years began further studies at the Royal Academy of Music. His time in London must have had a significant impact upon him, widening his horizons. Sullivan's musical education was expanded even further with a year-long period in Leipzig, where the music making of the Gewandhaus orchestra made a huge impression. Upon returning to England, Sullivan, at the age of 18, was determined to make his mark as a musician.

The Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra plays early works by Shostakovich and Hilary Hahn joins them for Prokofiev's First Violin Concerto.

Alain Altinoglu conducts Shostakovich's remarkable First Symphony, written when he was still a student, and premiered to huge acclaim by the Leningrad Philharmonic in 1926. That symphony and the Scherzo which opens this concert from Frankfurt's Alter Oper launches Alain Altinoglu's long-term project to explore the major works of Shostakovich with his orchestra. Also on the bill is Prokofiev's Violin Concerto no. 1 which Hilary Hahn says: "is unique because almost every note needs its own coloration and a different technical approach. It all changes at lightning speed. It's mentally challenging, but also insanely fun."

Ólafur Arnalds: Series 2

Music for new beginnings feat. Alice Sara Ott

Icelandic composer and pianist Ólafur Arnalds is ready to unwind. After an incredibly busy time playing concerts all over the world, he is back with a second series of Ultimate Calm - twelve unique episodes, each one a musical journey that seeks to find that all too elusive feeling of calm.

In the spirit of a new series, in this first episode Ólafur takes inspiration from the idea of new beginnings, with music related to fresh starts. He shares pieces from Ryuichi Sakamoto, Poppy Ackroyd and Philip Glass, and reflects on how music can provide feelings of escape and rejuvenation.

For each episode, Ólafur has invited a special guest to share with listeners their own sonic safe haven - the piece of music that brings them ultimate calm. This week our guest is the celebrated classical pianist Alice Sara Ott, who tells us about the piece that made her stand still when she first heard it - a composition by Arvo Pärt that she plays regularly in her own performances, leaving both her and her audience transformed every time.

Arthur Sullivan (1842-1900)

Sullivan at the Crystal Palace

Donald Macleod delves into George Grove's support for Sullivan promoting his music at the Crystal Palace

Sir Arthur Sullivan became the most renowned composer of the Victorian era, with his fame spreading across Europe and America too. His output spanned many genres including oratorios, a symphony, chamber music, hymns and anthems, but it was for his collaboration with the librettist W. S. Gilbert on operetta's that he is best remembered today. He was a personal friend to royalty, and he was knighted when he was in his early forties. He also had a liking for playing cards, buying race horses and gambling, frequently losing the substantial earnings from the stage works he'd composed. Sullivan became a pillar of the British musical establishment, so that when he died, despite wanting to be buried with his family in Brompton Cemetery, he was laid to rest in the crypt of St Paul's Cathedral, with an additional service at the Chapel Royal in St. James's Palace.

Sir George Grove scheduled Sullivan's incidental music to Shakespeare's The Tempest in a concert at the Crystal Palace in 1862. Sullivan became an overnight celebrity, and from there he never looked back. Sullivan and Grove lived close to one another in London, and would frequently go on trips abroad together too. Grove often programmed Sullivan's music in concerts, at a time when the composer was making his way as a paid church organist in fashionable parts of London. Through Grove, Sullivan met important people such as Charles Dickens, Rossini, and Lewis Carroll, as well as striking up a friendship with Alfred, the Duke of Edinburgh. Sullivan's first successful comic opera in 1866 was Cox and Box, and by the end of the decade he was commissioned to compose an oratorio for the Three Choirs Festival, The Prodigal Son.

An Alpine Symphony from Manchester

From the Bridgewater Hall in Manchester

Presented by Ian Skelly

The BBC Philharmonic are guided on an epic, day-long mountain journey by Nicholas Collon in Richard Strauss's 'An Alpine Symphony'. We travel with them through meadows and forests and experience weather, danger and exhilaration before arriving safely home. Soprano Francesca Chiejina joins the orchestra for Alban Berg's Seven Early Songs, music he revisited from earlier in his life to colour with deft orchestration. Again themes of the outdoors and nature are celebrated in summer days wandering in the countryside, as well as celebrating the joy of being back at home in front of the fire with a loved one. In 'Three pieces that disappear', a new BBC Radio 3 commission for the orchestra by their Conductor-in-Association, Tom Coult, he speaks of music "being remembered, forgotten, misremembered, imagined, deteriorating."

New Generation Thinkers 2022

Children of the Waters

An ancient Japanese Buddhist ritual which involves a red baby bib, a small statue and water, has been taken up by women wanting to have some way of marking a miscarriage and the life not lived. New Generation Thinker Sabina Dosani is a psychiatrist and writer doing research at the University of East Anglia. Her essay looks at the language we use for unborn children who die and at what we can learn about mourning rituals from the work of the 19th-century French sociologist Emile Durkheim, to modern services performed by Rabbis, in cathedrals and in peoples' back gardens.

Producer: Ruth Watts

Sabina Dosani is one of the ten New Generation Thinkers chosen in 2022 to work with BBC Radio 3 and the Arts and Humanities Research Council to share their research. You can hear her in Free Thinking discussion episodes called Mental Health, Stepmothers and Depicting AIDS in Drama. All episodes of Free Thinking and this Essay series from New Generation Thinkers are available on BBC Sounds and to download as Arts & Ideas podcasts.

Arthur Sullivan (1842-1900)

Sullivan meets Gilbert

Donald Macleod journeys through Sir Arthur Sullivan's first collaborations with W.S. Gilbert.

Sir Arthur Sullivan became the most renowned composer of the Victorian era, with his fame spreading across Europe and America, too. His output spanned many genres including oratorios, a symphony, chamber music, hymns and anthems, but it was for his collaboration with the librettist W.S. Gilbert on operettas that he is best remembered today. He was a personal friend to royalty, and he was knighted when he was in his early forties. He also had a liking for playing cards, buying race horses and gambling, frequently losing the substantial earnings from the stage works he'd composed. Sullivan became a pillar of the British musical establishment, so when he died, despite wanting to be buried with his family in Brompton Cemetery, he was laid to rest in the crypt of St Paul's Cathedral, with an additional service at the Chapel Royal in St. James's Palace.

Sullivan was now making his way in London, including a move to a new address, Albert Mansions on Victoria Street, along with his mother and a number of servants. Buckingham Palace was just a short walk away, which allowed for occasional visits from the Duke of Edinburgh, who liked to pop by to play his violin. The 1870s saw the beginnings of one of the most successful artistic partnerships of all time: Sullivan's collaborations with the librettist W.S. Gilbert. Their first venture was Thespis, followed, in that same decade, by Trial by Jury, The Sorcerer and HMS Pinafore. The Pirates of Penzance would become one of the duo's most successful operettas. Also during this period, Sullivan was busy composing over 40 hymn tunes and his second biblical oratorio, The Light of the World. It was, however, for his operettas that his name was becoming famous, with the impresario Richard D'Oyly Carte now organising productions in America too.

The award-winning Van Baerle Trio perform Faure's Piano Trio in D minor. Written after he'd retired from the Paris Conservatoire in his seventies, it's one of Faure's final works. Then follows a French take on Schumann's String Quartet No.3 Op 41 by former Radio 3 New Generation Artists, The Quatuor Ébène. Schumann wrote to his publishers about this work that 'you may rest assured that I have spared no pains to produce something really respectable—indeed, I sometimes think my best.' He dedicated the piece to his friend Felix Mendelssohn.

Recorded at the Queens Hall with presentation by Stephen Broad.

The London Sinfonietta and Sound Intermedia at the Royal Festival Hall

Leading contemporary music group London Sinfonietta joins forces with renowned sound designers Sound Intermedia at the Royal Festival Hall for an intriguing New York-focussed evening.

Beginning his composing career in the vanguard of Minimalism in 60s New York, Steve Reich has long-been a hugely influential international figure. His 2019 Reich/Richter is a mesmeric, pulsating and colour-shifting score designed as a soundtrack for the abstract images of visual artist Gerhard Richter's film Moving Picture.

Julia Wolfe's Tell me everything, from 1994, was inspired by hearing the jolly cacophony of a South American band on a cassette tape. 'It was joyful and unwieldy,' she says. 'There were so many times while writing this piece that I broke into laughter — wondering can I really write this, can it really go on like this?'

Unpredictable, provocative, charismatic and visionary, Julius Eastman's short life spiralled out of control in the 1980s and he died at the age of 49 in 1990. His 1974 Joy Boy for small ensemble shimmers and slowly morphs as musical layers are added in a process Eastman described as 'organic composition'. Tonight the London Sinfonietta perform it twice in two different instrumental combinations.

Born in 1969, British-based Mira Calix, visual artist and musician, also died too young, only last year. Her Nunu is based on audio and video sampling and mixing of a collection of insects including cicadas, cockroaches, crickets and beetles.

The concert also includes a premiere from London-born, New York-based Anna Clyne, one of today's most in-demand composers who collaborates with many of the world's leading orchestras, choreographers, filmmakers, and visual artists.

Recorded last week and introduced by Martin Handley.

Stupid Victorians

From "dull" to "feeble-minded" - the qualities associated with stupidity altered during the Victorian period alongside changes to schooling and education policies. Dr Louise Creechan, from Durham University, looks at the findings of the 1861 Newcastle Commission and at a range of characters in novels. We hear about the sibling rivalry of Maggie and Tom Tulliver and different ideas about male and female capabilities expressed in George Eliot's The Mill on the Floss (1860) and ideas about education and teaching in Charles Dickens' Our Mutual Friend (1864-65) and Hard Times (1854).

Producer: Luke Mulhall

Arthur Sullivan (1842-1900)

A Tempestuous Relationship

Donald Macleod delves into a period where Sullivan's working relationship with Gilbert begins to falter.

Sir Arthur Sullivan became the most renowned composer of the Victorian era, with his fame spreading across Europe and America too. His output spanned many genres including oratorios, a symphony, chamber music, hymns and anthems, but it was for his collaboration with the librettist W. S. Gilbert on operetta's that he is best remembered today. He was a personal friend to royalty, and he was knighted when he was in his early forties. He also had a liking for playing cards, buying race horses and gambling, frequently losing the substantial earnings from the stage works he'd composed. Sullivan became a pillar of the British musical establishment, so that when he died, despite wanting to be buried with his family in Brompton Cemetery, he was laid to rest in the crypt of St Paul's Cathedral, with an additional service at the Chapel Royal in St. James's Palace.

Sir Arthur Sullivan was rising to the height of his fame. He became the Principal for the new Training School for Music in South Kensington, which would later evolve into the Royal College of Music. He was also in demand as a conductor, leading the UK's first complete performance of Bach's B Minor Mass. His increased popularity and wealth enabled a move to a new home in Queen Anne's Mansions on Victoria Street, where he remained for the rest of his life. He was also being offered invitations to spend time with royalty, including a trip on the Prince of Wales's flagship, HMS Hercules where Sullivan got to visit the Winter palace in St. Petersburg and hear the Imperial Chapel Choir. The 1880s saw further collaborations with W. S. Gilbert including Patience, Iolanthe, Princess Ida, The Mikado, Ruddigore, The Yeomen of the Guard and The Gondoliers. Despite this substantial list of projects, Sullivan was becoming dissatisfied with his collaboration with Gilbert and planning to turn his attention to a more serious style of opera.

Arthur Sullivan (1842-1900)

The Great Carpet Quarrel

Donald Macleod explores the court case between Sullivan, his librettist W.S. Gilbert and the impresario D'Oyly Carte.

Sir Arthur Sullivan became the most renowned composer of the Victorian era, with his fame spreading across Europe and America, too. His output spanned many genres including oratorios, a symphony, chamber music, hymns and anthems, but it was for his collaboration with the librettist W.S. Gilbert on operettas that he is best remembered today. He was a personal friend to royalty, and he was knighted when he was in his early 40s. He also had a liking for playing cards, buying race horses and gambling, frequently losing the substantial earnings from the stage works he'd composed. Sullivan became a pillar of the British musical establishment, so when he died, despite wanting to be buried with his family in Brompton Cemetery, he was laid to rest in the crypt of St Paul's Cathedral, with an additional service at the Chapel Royal in St. James's Palace.

In the final decade of Sir Arthur Sullivan's life, he saw a dream of his come to fruition: a serious grand opera, called Ivanhoe.

Sullivan saw it as his most important work. Thanks to his popularity and international fame, the opening night was oversubscribed five times over for tickets. During this period, Sullivan was also regularly commissioned to compose works for royal occasions, such as the festivities surrounding Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee. He was viewed a national treasure, and when an argument arose between Sullivan, his librettist W.S. Gilbert, and the impresario Richard D'Oyly Carte, proceedings were followed avidly in the press. It was nicknamed the Great Carpet Quarrel. This put a stop to any collaboration between Sullivan and Gilbert, although in due course they did come together again, and their final operetta was The Grand Duke. It ran for only 123 performances, which D'Oyly Carte regarded as a failure.

Edinburgh New Town Concert Series (4/4)

Former New Generation Artists the Quatuor Ebene open the fourth programme in this series with Ravel's lively and colourful String Quartet in F. Written when Ravel was still in his 20s and finishing his studies at the Paris Conservatoire, he dedicated it to his teacher Gabriel Fauré. Mozart wrote his Piano Trio in B flat around the same time as three of his much-loved piano concertos and several piano quartets, so it's perhaps unsurprising that we hear a greater prominence in the piano lines of this work, performed by the prize-winning Van Baerle Trio.

Belcea Quartet with Bertrand Chamayou

Shostakovich's Piano Quintet in G minor was first performed in November 1940 by the Beethoven Quartet and Shostakovich himself. For the premiere of César Franck's F minor Quintet, the piano part was taken by none other than Camille Saint-Saëns. Franck had written it out for him with an appended note: "To my good friend Camille Saint-Saëns", whose piano music we hear in the interval this evening.
Recorded at Wigmore Hall, London, presented by Martin Handley.

Wild Water

For our watery and wild Verb - which flows though the water of chalk streams, the ocean, a baby's bath water, and birth waters - Ian McMillan is joined by Ruth Padel, Vik Sharma, Caroline Bergvall and Will Burns. Ruth and Vik share their collaboration '24 Splashes of Denial' which combines an apprehension of loss with vast and delicate beauty. Will Burns reads a new commission for The Verb on his experience of the chalk streams (a globally rare and 'gin-clear' habitat) of Buckinghamshire, and Caroline Bergvall opens a door in our watery imagination, tracing the idea of refuge in extracts from her project 'Nattsong'.

New Generation Thinkers 2022

Fighting the colour bar

Len Johnson, barred from fighting title bouts, had his career stopped short by a 'colour bar', but went onto fight against racism outside the ring. A campaign in Manchester is seeking to erect a statue to commemorate his success both in boxing and activism, which led to the ending of a ban in local pubs which had meant he was being refused service. His story of resistance is explored in this Essay from New Generation Thinker Shirin Hirsch, who is based at Manchester Metropolitan University and the People's History Museum.

Producer: Ruth Thomson.

Shirin Hirsch is a New Generation Thinker on the scheme run by BBC Radio 3 and the Arts and Humanities Research Council to select ten academics each year to share their research as radio. You can hear more from her in a Free Thinking discussion about May Day Rituals and you can find a whole series of features, essays and discussions with New Generation Thinkers drawn from the scheme, which has been running for more than a decade, on the Free Thinking programme website.

Exotic Sin and Julian Sartorius in session

Jennifer Lucy Allan shares the fruits of our latest improvised collaboration session between kaleidoscopic cosmic jazz duo Exotic Sin and creative drummer and percussionist Julian Sartorius.

Exotic Sin are London-based multi-instrumentalists Naima Karlsson and Kenichi Iwasa. They first came together for an event dedicated to the art and music of Moki and Don Cherry, Karlsson's grandparents, and have since continued to perform together as a duo. Improvisation is at the core of their practice, integrating acoustic instruments alongside electronics. The pair will be joined in the studio by Swiss drummer and percussionist Julian Sartorius, a player whose aesthetic reaches beyond the drum kit to encompass a range of prepared instruments and found objects. Sartorius' musical interests lie in exploring fine-scaled variations, balancing tension and release, and in creating precise and multi-layered rhythmical patterns.

Elsewhere in the show, sparse sampled vocal mutations from Edinburgh-based producer Proc Fiskal and a track from South African experimentalist Desire Marea, whose new album immerses itself in the communal, ceremonial and healing qualities of music.
