SAT 11:45 Music Matters (m001n82k)

Elim Chan; 400 years of William Byrd

As Radio 3 marks the 400th anniversary of William Byrd's death, Tom Service visits the centre of musical activity where the composer held positions as organist and master of the basilica's choristers early in his career, Lincoln Cathedral. He talks to the scholar Magnus Williams about how the building's acoustics shaped Byrd's compositional voice, and speaks to both the cathedral's current Director of Music, Aric Prentice, and Lay Vicar Thomas Wilson. He's also joined by four leading British composers and musicians, including Gabriel Jackson, Cheryl Frances-Hoad, James Weeks and Laura Cannell. They each discuss why Byrd's music inspires their creative process.

Ahead of her Prom with the BBC Symphony Orchestra later this month, Tom also hears from the conductor Elim Chan. Winner of the Donatella Flick LSO Conducting Competition in 2014, she tells Tom about her journey at the helm of several of the world's leading orchestras and why being on stage feels like being a rockstar.

Mette Henriette plus Ferg's Imaginary Big Band

Kevin Le Gendre hears from Sámi-Norwegian saxophonist, composer and improviser Mette Henriette whose recent album, Drifting, earned rave reviews. Mette is internationally recognised for her creative compositions, written for her own groups and large-scale ensembles including the Oslo Philharmonic, the Arctic Philharmonic and the Trondheim Symphony Orchestra. Here she shares some of the music that has inspired her, including a masterclass in emotional expression by opera star Maria Callas, and a Miles Davis classic that taught her the value of getting lost, as well as the importance of trusting her instincts.

Also in the programme, concert highlights from Leeds ensemble Ferg's Imaginary Big Band, recorded live at Manchester Jazz Festival 2023. Led by composer Fergus Quill and taking inspiration from Sun Ra, Loose Tubes and others, the band play expansive, high-energy sets that are never the same twice.

SAT 18:30 Opera on 3 (m001n966)

Verdi's Il Trovatore

Georgia Mann presents Verdi's epic melodrama from the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, with Riccardo Massi as the "troubadour" of the title and Jamie Barton as his mother Azucena. The opera's story, set in the 15th century, is driven by the power of superstition inherent to that era, and this new production by Adele Thomas takes visual inspiration from the fantastical paintings of Hieronymus Bosch. While at the same time, as guest commentator Sarah Hibberd points out, Il Trovatore is a classic of the over-the-top 19th-century genre of melodrama. Not to mention that it's packed with some of the best opera tunes ever, as brothers (though they don't know it) Manrico and the Conte di Luna battle for the love of Leonora and each other's death.

Leonora ..... Rachel Willis-Sørensen (soprano)

Azucena ..... Jamie Barton (mezzo-soprano)
 Manrico ..... Roberto Massi (tenor)
 Conte di Luna ..... Ludovic Tézier (baritone)
 Ferrando, Luna's sidekick ..... Roberto Tagliavini (bass)

Transformative Terrains

Corey Mwamba presents the best new improvised music.

Swiss saxophonist Eva-Maria Karbacher pulls listeners into the mountainous habitat of the Ochotona, a small mammal with a lively call found in Asia and North America. Despite the animal's size, Karbacher creates full-bodied, atmospheric chatter through circular, hypnotic solos. Plus, whipping winds, howling vocals and eerie echolocation by way of Brazil from sound artists Renata Roman, Paola Ribeiro, and Laura aLL.

Elsewhere, to launch a new series of features exploring the UK's many and varied hubs of improvised music, we hear from the artist Maria Sappho. A riveting live performer, Sappho is a member of the Glasgow Improvisers Orchestra and Noisebringers ensemble and also plays experimental music with the world's only multi-modal creative AI. She shares what's happening in the free music scene in Huddersfield, as well as her collaborations with mushrooms.

Alexander Polzin

Alexander Polzin is a German sculptor, painter, costume and set designer. He began his career as a stonemason, but is now well known for his collaborations with writers, composers, choreographers and scientists.

He has created sets, often drawing on his work in sculpture, for operas including Verdi's Falstaff and Rigoletto, and Wagner's Tristan and Isolde, for which he created huge illuminated stalactites, suspended above the stage. For a 2022 production of Mozart's opera Mitridate in Copenhagen, the centrepiece was an enormous layered ochre-coloured rock formation, with which bodies merged or slid across.

As a painter and sculptor, he's enjoyed exhibitions in galleries around the world, and has collaborated with the Aldeburgh Festival in Suffolk, in 2016 and 2023. His work also appears in prominent public spaces, including his statue of Giordano Bruno in Potsdamer Platz in Berlin.

William Byrd's keyboard music

Although best known for his vocal music, William Byrd's keyboard music was rich and diverse, leading the way for composers such as Giles Farnaby and Thomas Tomkins. Lucie Skeaping speaks to Professor of Harpsichord and Fortepiano Carole Cerasi about how Byrd set the future style of English keyboard music and why it remains important now 400 years after his death.

Everyday Heroism

As the NHS marks 75 years of service on July 5th, our programme today celebrates everyday heroes with readings by Paterson Joseph and Ruth Bradley. Recent poems by Raymond Antrobus and Jackie Kay consider the experiences of frontline medical staff dealing with COVID-19. Teachers feature in an extract from George Dennison's account of The First Street School in New York, and in Roald Dahl's Matilda. The quiet heroism of rural communities takes us to Sunset Song's Chris Guthrie toiling daily on the land of North East Scotland, and the shepherd Gabriel Oak battling a fire in Thomas Hardy's Far From the Madding Crowd. And the global impact of a single bold act of everyday heroism is evoked by Rita Dove's poem about civil rights icon Rosa Parks, who challenged where she had to sit on a bus. The music includes works by Arvo Part, Vince Guaraldi, Carole King, Beethoven, and Charles Ives.

From Dusk Till Dawn

Ian Rawes (1965-2021) was a sound recordist best known for creating the London Sound Survey, a huge collection of his recordings of the sounds of London.

Before his death, Ian was recording the course of the night across the wilder places of East Anglia. He made these field recordings in remote locations across Norfolk and Suffolk, sometimes camping overnight in bird hides to capture the different nocturnal moments.

Ian called the project, 'From Dusk Till Dawn', and handed the recordings to his friend, composer/producer Iain Chambers, saying that he wanted them to bring about something new.

Here, writer Kayo Chingonyi responds to the recordings, and Iain uses both elements to create a new composed sound piece, in tribute to Ian Rawes.

We start at sunset: the sounds of wildfowl travel far across the flooded fields of the Ouse Washes in Cambridgeshire. Many are Bewick's and whooper swans spending the winter in the Fens before migrating back to Iceland and Siberia.

A Powerful Crush

Letters from a teenage Prince of Wales to Mary Hamilton have largely been seen as missives of love, showing a rather sweet side of the boy who'd grow up to become the debauched George IV.

Sophie Coulombeau, Lecturer in English Literature at the University of York and Co-Investigator on the research project Unlocking the Mary Hamilton Papers argues there's a darker side to the story.

Mary Hamilton was his sisters' governess. She didn't welcome the Prince's attentions, had no desire to become his mistress or wife and she was terrified about the effect that his advances might have on her precious reputation.

George's pursuit looks less like a harmless crush and more like a case of 18th-century sexual harassment in the workplace.

Sophie retells the story of this 1779 summer of "love", following clues from the library at Kew Palace, through the butterflies of Kew Gardens to the heart of power and politics outside Westminster.

She is joined by author and historian Sally Holloway, curator Polly Putnam and the Fawcett Society's Alesha De-Freitas.

Readings are by Scarlett Brookes and Will Kirk and the producer is Sarah Bowen.

William Byrd (1543-1623)

A Man of Many Parts

Donald Macleod shines a light on the intricate tangle of relationships, duties and ideas that surrounded Byrd.

This week, Donald Macleod marks the 400th anniversary of the death of William Byrd, the greatest British musician of his age. Donald is joined all week by Byrd expert Kerry McCarthy to explore Byrd's story and reveal a composer of determined ambition and powerful convictions. Those who encountered him, found Byrd could be a difficult adversary as well as a loyal friend. Donald also visits Essex to discover what remains of Byrd's legacy in the places where he felt most at home, and to see how the composer navigated a hazardous path between his Catholic faith and his duty to the crown at a time of great religious intolerance.

Today, we're introduced to some of Byrd's varied roles and identities, as a public servant and a private individual. Plus, Donald investigates how this sometimes isolated composer connected with the community in which he lived.

Talking about Silence

An Invitation to Silence

'Talking about Silence' is a personal pilgrimage around an enjoyable paradox: that you can understand silence better if you talk about it. In his new series of essays, Diarmaid MacCulloch explores the many varieties of spiritual silence in human life and beyond, and what he's learned of its meanings in his six-decade career as a historian of religion.

Framed by his memories of filming at some of the most significant Christian sites in the world for his land-mark TV series on the history of Christianity, Diarmaid explores how even though Christianity has been a religion of the word, it cannot escape silence, because silence is wrapped up in the lived experiences of Christians through time. He presents silence in all its different forms: as the truest expression of the divine, as well as a vehicle of the greatest evil, over the course of Christianity's two thousand years of existence.

In his first essay, Diarmaid MacCulloch introduces us to the theme of silence and how he has returned to the subject at key points during his career. Looking back on his life, Diarmaid sees it was a path laid down from the beginning, which sprang from the experience of a happy but isolated country parsonage childhood: alert already to history and its delights, but also alert as a gay teenager to the way in which things are not said, and what the meaning of that silence is. The hero of Diarmaid's favourite story is the little boy who told the crowd that the emperor had no clothes on. That, says Diarmaid, is what his whole career writing and teaching history has been devoted to: showing up the Emperors with no clothes and ending the silences that need ending.

Lincoln

Byrd starts his adult working life, determined to impress, but can he compromise too? With Donald Macleod.

This week, Donald Macleod marks the 400th anniversary of the death of William Byrd, the greatest British musician of his age. Donald is joined all week by Byrd expert Kerry McCarthy to explore Byrd's story and reveal a composer of determined ambition and powerful convictions. Those who encountered him, found Byrd could be a difficult adversary as well as a loyal friend. Donald also visits Essex to discover what remains of Byrd's legacy in the places where he felt most at home, and to see how the composer navigated a hazardous path between his Catholic faith and his duty to the crown at a time of great religious intolerance.

Today, Donald follows Byrd to Lincoln where he's been offered a prestigious new role at the cathedral. He finds there are plenty of opportunities to seize here but also some frustrating challenges; Byrd doesn't always see eye to eye with his ecclesiastical bosses.

New Generation Artists in Concert: Spotlight on Kunal Lahiry

Radio 3 New Generation Artist Kunal Lahiry brings together the creative culture of LGBTQ+ artists and classical music in a specially curated "Queer Song Festival", part of Bristol Pride.

Recorded at St George's Bristol, in these highlights from the two-day festival highly acclaimed soprano Ruby Hughes, herself a former New Generation Artist, and Kunal, a current member, perform a richly varied programme ranging from Schubert to a newly commissioned work by singer and performance artist Lyra Pramuk as well as poet Nat Marcus - a queer response to Schubert's Winterreise.

Grammy award-winning tenor Frederick Ballentine joins Kunal after the interval. "Our People" is a deeply moving story of the black and LGBTQ+ people of America's experience, told through song in four chapters: Otherness, Oppression, Reflection, and Revolution. From traditional spirituals like "Sometimes I feel like a Motherless Child" and Margaret Bonds, to Rachmaninov to Billie Holiday's "Strange Fruit", and contemporary responses from John Musto and Ricky Ian Gordon as part of the AIDS Quilt Songbook, "Our People" explores and rejoices the journey of these two communities separately, but also together.

Talking about Silence

The Wild Track

'Talking about Silence' is a personal pilgrimage around an enjoyable paradox: that you can understand silence better if you talk about it. In his new series of essays, Diarmaid MacCulloch explores the many varieties of spiritual silence in human life and beyond, and what he's learned of its meanings in his six-decade career as a historian of religion.

In this essay, Diarmaid MacCulloch introduces us to the concept of the 'Wild Track' of the TV or radio interview, whose rationale in recording silence is that every silence is different and has its own personality. Diarmaid's life-long research into the history of Christianity has helped him listen to the 'wild-track' of Christian silences, and how Christians have changed their minds on the subject of silence over time. In fact, the first Christians had little respect for silence: they experienced their God in noise. But in seeking to understand their disasters, they gradually saw how they might find their God in profound silence. Jesus' life, as portrayed by the Gospel writers, is punctuated by meaningful silence. So, says Diarmaid, silence is built into the foundation of Christian history, and it has taken a multitude of wild-track byways over two thousand years.

This week, Donald Macleod marks the 400th anniversary of the death of William Byrd, the greatest British musician of his age. Today, a tragic accident leaves a vacancy at the Chapel Royal. Byrd steps up to join this elite band of musicians and works hard to make the most of his new connections at the royal court. When Queen Elizabeth awards him a patent to print music, surely fame and riches will follow?

Talking about Silence

In a Monastery Garden

'Talking about Silence' is a personal pilgrimage around an enjoyable paradox: that you can understand silence better if you talk about it. In his new series of essays, Diarmaid MacCulloch explores the many varieties of spiritual silence in human life and beyond, and what he's learned of its meanings in his six-decade career as an historian of religion.

Today Diarmaid takes us inside the spiritual homes of Christian silence, the monasteries. But he says, although they seem a natural part of its two millennia of history, monasteries are actually an early import into Christianity from Syria, which made sense for Christianity. The monastic life of contemplation and silence went on to triumph for a thousand years throughout the Church. The triumph was so complete, that monks developed a language of silence, using all ten fingers of the hand to convey meaning in everyday life. And yet, says Diarmaid, as in all triumphs, there was a reckoning.

William Byrd (1543-1623)

Recusant

Donald Macleod examines Byrd the religious rebel.

This week, Donald Macleod marks the 400th anniversary of the death of William Byrd, the greatest British musician of his age. Donald is joined all week by Byrd expert Kerry McCarthy to explore Byrd's story and reveal a composer of determined ambition and powerful convictions. Those who encountered him, found Byrd could be a difficult adversary as well as a loyal friend. Donald also visits Essex to discover what remains of Byrd's legacy in the places where he felt most at home, and to see how the composer navigated a hazardous path between his Catholic faith and his duty to the crown at a time of great religious intolerance.

Today, Donald looks at the consequences for 'recusants', like Byrd, who remained loyal to the Catholic faith even though catholic worship had been outlawed by the queen. Donald visits Ingatstone Hall, home to Byrd's patron and fellow recusant, Sir John Petre (later Lord Petre), and investigates how they pursued their beliefs in rural Essex, while also remaining loyal servants of the crown.

Talking about Silence

Reformation: Losing Silence

'Talking about Silence' is a personal pilgrimage around an enjoyable paradox: that you can understand silence better if you talk about it. In his new series of essays, Diarmaid MacCulloch explores the many varieties of spiritual silence in human life and beyond, and what he's learned of its meanings in his six-decade career as a historian of religion.

Today Diarmaid MacCulloch takes us inside Martin Luther's home in Wittenberg, Germany, to explore how Luther's message rewrote the lived experience of Christian silence from the moment he burst onto the scene with his radical, reforming message. The monasteries, as factories of silent prayer, were symbolic of the majesty of the medieval western Church, and so they became the chief casualties of the Protestant Reformation. It took the most radical spirits of the Reformation to realise that something precious was in danger of being lost: the Quakers, who have often found that silent gatherings are the best settings in which to worship. Modern Protestants can still be very noisy, says Diarmaid, and he recalls visiting a revivalist megachurch in South Korea that was the loudest of them all.

Byrd Reworked

Elizabeth Alker shares original unclassifiable sonic creations made especially for the programme, as three contemporary composers offer new takes on the music of William Byrd to mark four hundred year's since the Renaissance man's death.

Regarded as one of the great English composers of the Elizabethan and Jacobean eras, William Byrd's musical output included choral works intended for the great cathedrals and chapels of his day as well as secular instrumental music designed for the major courts and households. His approach to creating musical structures often involved the gradual addition of layers and the overlapping of melodic ideas as well as subtle repetition and variation, techniques employed by many artists working today within ambient and experimental music.

Singer-composer Kieran Brunt takes inspiration from Civitas Sancti Tui, a motet which Byrd wrote in response to the persecution of Catholics under Elizabeth I's early rule. The Latin text speaks of desolation - "The city of thy sanctuary is become a wilderness, / Sion is made a Wilderness, / Jerusalem is desolate" - and Brunt's creation takes fragments from the original and repeats them like mantras through broken, auto-tuned layers of his own voice and distorted synths. Welsh composer-musician Georgia Ruth, meanwhile, responds to The Bells, a harpsichord piece in which Byrd evokes the peeling and clamouring sounds of a belfry in the countryside. Ruth uses harp, pedals and field recordings gathered in her rural surroundings to build up a meditative sound world. And improvising composer Laura Cannell re-imagines a melancholic song by Byrd, translating the piece into an arrangement for three bass-recorders. Phrases from the original are stretched, half-remembered, overlaid and ornamented in a piece of overdubbed contemporary consort music dedicated to her friend, the late artist Mira Calix.

Talking about Silence

Good Silence, Bad Silence

'Talking about Silence' is a personal pilgrimage around an enjoyable paradox: that you can understand silence better if you talk about it. In his new series of essays, Diarmaid MacCulloch explores the many varieties of spiritual silence in human life and beyond, and what he's learned of its meanings in his six-decade career as a historian of religion.

Framed by his memories of filming at some of the most significant Christian sites in the world for his land-mark TV series on the history of Christianity, Diarmaid explores how even though Christianity has been a religion of the word, it cannot escape silence, because silence is wrapped up in the lived experiences of Christians through time. He presents silence in all its different forms: as the truest expression of the divine, as well as a vehicle of the greatest evil, over the course of Christianity's two thousand years of existence.

In his final essay, Diarmaid MacCulloch explores how Christianity contains silences that need ending and the role the historian takes in doing so.

Ale Hop's mixtape

Verity Sharp shares the latest Late Junction mixtape, this time courtesy of Berlin-based Peruvian artist Alejandra Cárdenas, aka Ale Hop, ahead of her performance at this year's Heroines of Sound Festival. An experimental instrumentalist, Ale Hop's live performances see her combine a diverse repertoire of extended techniques for electric guitar with real-time sampling devices, in the process building up layers of sonic intensity.

Cárdenas began her career in the 2000s in Lima's experimental and underground scenes before exploring her own solo artistry, as well as co-founding the Berlin-based festival Radical Sounds Latin America and now facilitating critical discourse and artistic research around the practice of listening through her platform Contingent Sounds. Much of Ale Hop's work is informed by her background as a researcher and academic, with her latest album, Agua Dulce, in collaboration with percussionist Laura Robles, offering up a radical deconstruction of traditional rhythms of the Peruvian coast, in which the cajón instrument plays a central role.

Elsewhere in the show, African Head Charge, the collaborative project between percussionist Bonjo Iyabinghi Noah and dub producer Adrian Sherwood, return with their first new album in twelve years, a psychedelic travelogue across the landscape of northern Ghana, and Portland pianist Mary Sutton delves into her Cherokee roots with a musical evocation of a day in the life of a bear in the Smoky Mountains.
