Ólafur Arnalds: Series 1

Blissful body-related music feat. Kaitlyn Aurelia Smith

Take a deep breath and join Icelandic composer and pianist Ólafur Arnalds for another hour-long musical journey into calm.

This week, Ólafur looks inwards with a selection of music inspired by the body. He reflects on the importance of focusing on your breath and the sound of your own heartbeat in order to ground yourself, and shares music from Julianna Barwick, Ben Lukas Boysen and Richard Reed Parry.

Plus the American composer Kaitlyn Aurelia Smith transports us to her Safe Haven, the place where she feels the most calm - inside herself.

Pianist Lucy Parham is in the studio with a clutch of exciting new releases and shares her 'On Repeat' track - a recording which she is currently listening to again and again.

10.30 am

Building a Library: Nigel Simeone discusses his favourite recordings of Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade

Scheherazade is a symphonic suite composed by Nikolai Rimsky-Korsakov in 1888 and based on The Arabian Nights. It is one of his most popular works combining colourful orchestration and gorgeous melodies.

Rimsky-Korsakov set the scene with a brief introduction: The Sultan Schakhriar, convinced that all women are false and faithless, vowed to put to death each of his wives after the first nuptial night. But the Sultana Scheherazade saved her life by entertaining her lord with fascinating tales for a thousand and one nights. The Sultan, consumed with curiosity, postponed from day to day the execution of his wife, and finally repudiated his bloody vow entirely.

11.20 am

Record of the Week: Andrew's top pick.

SAT 11:45 Music Matters (m001r1z8)

Tom Service talks to conductor Semyon Bychkov

Tom Service talks at length to one of the 21st-century's leading conductors, Semyon Bychkov.

Celebrating his 70th birthday last year, Semyon prizes servitude to music's spirit and using one's talent to find how best to let it unfold. Tom meets him at his home in London, the morning after conducting Bruckner's epic 8th Symphony during this summer's Proms, where he reflects on the degree to which a music can invade one's existence and the struggle to escape its orbit, following a compelling performance, lest it leads to sleepless nights.

Tom hears how Bychkov fled the Soviet Union in the 1970s, about his forays into the musical world of Vienna where he arrived with the just the currency in his pockets, and how his subsequent experiences seem, in hindsight, like destiny. He talks about the mobilisation of Russian culture, how music is utilised by the political establishment, the illusion of power, and why for a while he excised the music of Shostakovich from his life so evocative was its strength during his early days of self-imposed exile. He tells Tom, nevertheless, about the attitude, aspiration and judgment he learned from his early teachers - sustenance to which he returns - and how they nurture his musical evolution still. He explains, too, the continuing musical challenges behind the monumental cycle of Mahler's symphonies that he embarked upon when appointed the chief conductor of the Czech Philharmonic.

SAT 13:00 Inside Music (m001r1zm)

Soprano Golda Schultz with musical conversations

Golda Schultz is a soprano who finds conversations in music - between performers, composers and listeners, and today she invites you to explore some of her favourite tracks with her. There's virtuosity in many forms - from Mozart, to Bobby McFerrin and Astor Piazzolla, and Golda explains how you achieve tension through harmonic changes with the help of composer Florence Price.

She also reveals the powerful musical storytelling in Rebecca Clarke's song The Seal Man, and admires the constantly moving bassline played by Charles Mingus in Duke Ellington's Caravan.

Plus, Golda is rendered speechless by the end of Richard Strauss' opera Daphne...

A series in which each week a musician explores a selection of music - from the inside.

SAT 18:30 Opera on 3 (m001r73s)

Wagner's Das Rheingold

Wagner's Das Rheingold from the Royal Opera House, London, conducted by Antonio Pappano and starring Christopher Maltman and Christopher Purves.

Das Rheingold is the first of the four music dramas which make up Wagner's epic Ring cycle. It's a story of gods and dwarves, giants and Rhinemaidens. Out of these tales from Norse mythology Wagner forges a drama which explores themes of love and its renunciation, nature and its despoliation and the curse of ultimate power - symbolised by the ring fashioned from gold plundered by the dwarf Alberich from the depths of the Rhine. In this first drama we follow the escapades of Wotan, chief of the gods, in company with the trickster, Loge as they descend into Nibelheim in search of the gold, the tarnhelm of invisibility and the ring of power. This new production by Barrie Kosky inaugurates a new Ring cycle at the Royal Opera House which will unfold over the coming years.

Presented by Georgia Mann.

SUN 00:00 Freeness (m001r213)

The Trumpet Shall Paint

Corey Mwamba presents new music from Charlotte Keeffe's Right Here, Right Now Quartet including previously-unheard recordings from the band's live set at this year's Manchester Jazz Festival, recorded especially for Freeness.

The group - comprising Moss Freed (guitar), Ashley John Long (double bass), Ben Handysides (drums) and leader Charlotte Keeffe on trumpet - have just released their second album ALIVE! In The Studio, billed as "a messy emporium of raw, raucous realism". Sharing music from the record, Keeffe offers reflections on the musicians who have influenced her approach to trumpet-playing, as well as her characterisation of the instrument as a "Sound Brush".

Elsewhere in the show, we lend our ears to a piece of psychedelic groove-based improvisation recently landed in the Freeness inbox courtesy of Zygurat, a quartet comprising Pete Grimshaw (modular synthesiser, kalimba), Sam Wooster (trumpet, electronics), Xhosa Cole (tenor saxophone, flutes) and Nathan England-Jones (drums, percussion). Plus we get lost in a labyrinth of vocal improvisations as Kyoko Kitamura is joined by Ingrid Laubrock (tenor sax), Ken Filiano (bass) and Dayeon Seok (drums).

SUN 17:00 The Listening Service (m001r26s)

The Ethereal

The opening orchestral strains of Wagner's opera Lohengrin with its high shimmering strings prompted the French poet Charles Baudelaire to observe that in Wagner's music he found "something rapt and enthralling, something aspiring to mount higher, something excessive and superlative". The ability of music to evoke a sense of the ethereal has a strange and powerful effect on listeners, something that composers have been aware of across the ages. Tom Service examines how this music creates its affect and to what ends. He draws on examples from Hildegard of Bingen, Gregorio Allegri, Wolfgang Mozart, James Horner, Einojuhani Rautavaara and George Crumb - among others - and of course Richard Wagner.

SUN 17:30 Words and Music (m001r272)

Blow winds, blow

'Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks!' railed King Lear and we start and finish with the violence of winds, on land and sea. Joseph Conrad, Zora Neale Hurston and Seamus Heaney write about the unequal battle with an unseen enemy, and you can hear the smallness of humankind in the eye of a storm, in the works of Britten's Peter Grimes and Vaughan Williams's Sinfonia Antartica. Gentler winds feed the senses and summon memories for Derek Walcott and William Wordsworth, while Emily Dickinson welcomes in the footless stranger. But there are unearthly winds that make people behave strangely, in Joan Didion's description of the Santa Anas, and Voltaire believed an east wind could bring utter despair.

Composers from Debussy to Toru Takemitsu and Nirmali Fenn have taken the movement of wind as inspiration in their work. And the Swedish Chamber Choir vocally recall the gusty mountain wind in Jan Sandstrom's Biegga louthe.
There's more bluster from the readers Adrian Scarborough and Amaka Okafor who bring to life those great windbags and blowhards, Shakespeare's Polonius and Pam Ayres's know-it-all husband.

SUN 18:45 Between the Ears (m001r27c)
Tuning Up

Aidan is our poetic guide through this crucial but blink-and-you-miss-it prologue to art, sport, nature. This metaphor for so many other things: the anticipation of something. Of imminence, excitement, nerves. But it's also about ritual: an orchestra tuning up or boxers crossing themselves before a fight are rites of passage, almost superstition - the moment is confirming.

This programme unfolds with one of the BBC orchestras on stage tuning up, where we return at regular intervals to hear from musicians about the importance of this moment. Alongside them are cricketers, sprinters, restaurateurs, surfers, singers. All of them know the progress from ordinary life to another life under the spotlight, and they all have ways of coping. Aidan listens to their inner voices, their mantras, the rituals that make the transition seem controllable. He explores the way time shifts, accelerating and slowing, and why the final silence is at once terrifying and magical.

SUN 23:00 African Classical Music (m001r289)
Chamber Music and Instrumental Legacies

Composer and multi-instrumentalist Tunde Jegede grew up inside two musical traditions: the Western Classical music of his cello studies and schooling in London; and the kora repertoire of The Gambia, where he spent his school holidays as a young mentee of the griot musician Amadu Bansang Jobarteh. As his musicianship in the UK developed, Jegede began to find it strange how the music of western composers was so easily considered to be art music worthy of the title "Classical", while African pieces were often talked about as culturally-confined curiosities, regardless of how complex or canonical they are. In this series, Jegede sets out to celebrate a variety of African Classical traditions on their own terms, picking out musical details and offering connections and contrasts.

In this first episode, he explores the instrumental legacies of West African Griot music as well as thumb piano polyphony from Zimbabwe. Plus there's the opportunity to consider the work of African composers operating within Western Classical Music who incorporate into their solo studies and chamber works the sounds, structures and approaches of their own African classical traditions.

Gabriel Fauré (1845-1924)

A Broken Engagement

Donald Macleod explores the impact of celebrated singer, Pauline Viardot, and her daughters upon Fauré.

Gabriel Fauré's story begins during the second half of the 19th century, when the musical world was dominated by the heavily romantic voices of composers like Wagner, Brahms and Liszt. Fauré became a key protagonist in a musical revolution that opened audiences' ears to new modes of expression - modern, refined and utterly French. As a composer, and as a teacher at the Paris Conservatoire, he left a huge legacy on the music of the twentieth century. This week Donald Macleod explores some of the many turning points in Fauré's career, and how those events affected his life and his art.

Gabriel Fauré was invited to meet the legendary singer Pauline Viardot. He became a regular attendee at Viardot's fashionable salon, where the young composer encountered other musicians and also writers such as Gustave Flaubert, George Sand and Ivan Turgenev. Viardot was very taken with Fauré and she advised him to give up writing chamber music and focus on opera. Fauré fell in love with Viardot's youngest daughter, Marianne, and eventually proposed to her. Marianne broke off their engagement, which some have suggested was the reason for Fauré developing a reputation as a 'Don Juan'.

Michael Schönwandt, conductor

In this concert from the Montpellier Festival in the south of France, Karine Deshayes sings Berlioz' songs of summer nights; wonders spring from Aladdin's lamp in a work by the Danish composer Horneman, friend and contemporary of Grieg, and love's intricacies and agonies are evoked by Schoenberg (who, at this early stage in his career, is still the heir of Brahms and Wagner) in his vast and voluptuous symphonic poem Pelléas and Mélisande.

The Lost Hours

Elevenes

Eleven o'clock in the morning is in danger of becoming a non-time. But there used to be a mid-morning light meal called elevenes. The theory was that one needed sustenance in the middle of the morning - a staging post to luncheon. Andrew Martin investigates its heyday in the nursery, in fiction (where would Paddington and Winnie the Pooh be without their mid-morning snack?) and in the office, and ponders what we lose by letting the busy-ness of modern life erode this comforting morning pause in our busy schedules.

The Lost Hours is a series of essays about how the day used not to be so monolithic; about how it was punctuated by rituals that lent a character to different hours. All the rituals described seem to be in decline, but none can be written off completely. And, a cheering thought, perhaps some will revive post-Covid as we rediscover the social possibilities of our days. They reflect a way of life both more leisured and more regimented, and one of their virtues might be that as well as enriching our days they actually slow them down too, and paradoxically give us more time.

Marriage

Donald Macleod looks into Fauré's married life and his encounters with the music of Richard Wagner.

Gabriel Fauré's story begins during the second half of the 19th century, when the musical world was dominated by the heavily romantic voices of composers like Wagner, Brahms and Liszt. Fauré became a key protagonist in a musical revolution that opened audiences' ears to new modes of expression - modern, refined and utterly French. As a composer, and as a teacher at the Paris Conservatoire, he left a huge legacy on the music of the 20th century. This week Donald Macleod explores some of the many turning points in Fauré's career, and how those events affected his life and his art.

Gabriel Fauré was often asked by the megastar singer, Pauline Viardot, to turn his attention to opera, and he set off to experience the greatest operas of his day. He commented that Wagner's music made him 'weary with admiration' but he never became a total devotee of the Wagner cult. In 1883, Fauré married to Marie Fremiet. Their liaison seems to have begun by Fauré pulling Marie's name out of a hat! Their life quickly settled into a comfortable routine but it soon must have been obvious to Marie that she would have to play a subsidiary role in her husband's world.

Santtu-Matias Rouvali conducts Sibelius and Shostakovich

Now in his third season as the Philharmonia Orchestra's charismatic Principal Conductor, Santtu-Matias Rouvali begins this concert with fellow Finn Sibelius's Symphony No. 6, defiantly described by the composer himself as 'pure cold water' as opposed to the fashionable 'cocktails of every hue' provided by so many of his 1920s contemporaries.

Full of whacky, tail-chasing, Keystone Cops-type moments, Shostakovich seems to be recalling his days as a silent cinema pianist in his playful Concerto for Piano, Trumpet and Strings. The soloists are Chopin Competition winner Seong-Jin Cho and the Philharmonia's brilliant young principal, Jason Evans.

Shostakovich ends the concert: the last of the three contrasting movements of his Symphony No. 6 is a manic, circus-like dash to the finish.

Recorded last month at the Royal Festival Hall and introduced by Martin Handley.

TUE 22:00 Free Thinking (m001r25f)

Art, Kew, a symphony and nature

An accidental invention which revolutionised plant collecting has inspired an artwork from Mat Collishaw, created in collaboration with video artists based in Ukraine, which is being premiered in a gallery at Kew Gardens. The nine minute video, accompanied by music by Samuel Barber's Adagio for strings, draws on the discovery in 1829 that a Wardian case could allow plants to grow under airtight glass. And the way art and music respond to environmental concerns is at the heart of this Free Thinking conversation hosted by Jade Munslow Ong. Jimmy López Bellido has written a symphony inspired by photographs of a changing landscape, Sarah Casey's drawings look at the impact of ice melting in glaciers and New Generation Thinker Vid Simoniti has written a book exploring the political ambitions of contemporary art in the early twenty-first century looking at including Ai Weiwei and Olafur Eliasson.

Producer in Salford: Nick Holmes

Petrichor, a new exhibition of work by Mat Collishaw runs from 20 October 2023- 7 April 2024 at the Shirley Sherwood Gallery of Botanical Art, Kew Gardens.

Sarah Casey is Director of the School of Art in Lancaster Institute for the Contemporary Arts and has worked on The Emergency project which uses drawing to examine artefacts emerging from alpine glaciers as a result of climate change and ice melting. She also convenes a group studying rocky environments and geology.

Vid Simoniti's book published in October 2023 is called Artists Remake the World: A Contemporary Art Manifesto. He teaches at The University of Liverpool.

Symphony No 3, Altered Landscapes by Jimmy López Bellido is being played by the BBC Concert Orchestra in a concert at London's Southbank Centre on Thu 12 Oct 2023 and will be broadcast on BBC Radio 3 on October 25th

The Hyundai Commission from artist El Anatsui runs at Tate Modern in London from October 10th - April 14th 2024

The Stuff of Life | The Life of Stuff runs at the Sainsbury Centre Gallery in Norwich from 10 September -14 January 2024

Jade Munslow Ong teaches at the University of Salford and is writing a book about the environment in literature. She is on the New Generation Thinkers scheme run by BBC Radio 3 and the Arts and Humanities Research Council to work with early career researchers on making radio.

Green Thinking is a collection of programmes exploring different aspects of art and history and the environment available via the Free Thinking programme website - all episodes are downloadable as the Arts & Ideas podcast and on BBC Sounds.

The Lost Hours

Lunch

Lunch, dinner, luncheon, ladies who lunch and much more come under the spotlight in writer Andrew Martin's second essay. Lunch as a leisure activity, and the working lunch, or indeed the business lunch - are these in decline as a result of a new puritanism? The class implications of lunch, and what you call it, are legion, and Martin takes us on an intriguing whistle-stop tour of lunching through the ages from medieval times to the era of Covid.

The Lost Hours is a series of essays about how the day used not to be so monolithic; about how it was punctuated by rituals that lent a character to different hours. All the rituals described seem to be in decline, but none can be written off completely. And, a cheering thought, perhaps some will revive post-Covid as we rediscover the social possibilities of our days. They reflect a way of life both more leisured and more regimented, and one of their virtues might be that as well as enriching our days they actually slow them down too, and paradoxically give us more time.

Illustrious Circles

Donald Macleod finds Gabriel Fauré navigating his way through Parisian high society and setting poems by Paul Verlaine

Gabriel Fauré's story begins during the second half of the 19th century, when the musical world was dominated by the heavily romantic voices of composers like Wagner, Brahms and Liszt. Fauré became a key protagonist in a musical revolution that opened audiences' ears to new modes of expression - modern, refined and utterly French. As a composer, and as a teacher at the Paris Conservatoire, he left a huge legacy on the music of the 20th century. This week Donald Macleod explores some of the many turning points in Fauré's career, and how those events affected his life and his art.

During the mid to late 1880s, Gabriel Fauré found himself welcomed into the social circles of high society. He dedicated his famous Pavane to one of the pre-eminent Parisian hostesses, Elizabeth, the Countess Greffulhe. The poet and society figure, Count Robert de Montesquiou, introduced Fauré to the poetry of Verlaine. Composer and poet then met at the home of Princess Edmond de Polignac, whose glittering salons brought together many of the leading figures in French culture, like Diaghilev and Proust, with wealthy and influential citizens. During this heady time of networking, Fauré composed one of his most famous works, his Requiem. When it was first heard at the Madeleine church where Fauré worked, the clergy were not pleased at all.

The Hallé - Daphnis and Chloe

With Sibelius's music woven through the Hallé's DNA, expect a stunning performance of The Oceanides, an impressionistic masterpiece that evokes the sea and nymphs of Greek mythology. Its ending is terrifying, a huge tsunami welling up through the orchestra. Sir Mark then collaborates with Roberto Ruisi, the Hallé's Leader in Stravinsky's Violin Concerto. Its Neo-Baroque character, defined by Bachian traits, is typically Stravinskian too with its crystalline orchestral colours, sardonic gestures and singing lyricism. For the finale, the Hallé Choir join for Ravel's complete Daphnis and Chloe. Although conceived as a ballet, the work is a brilliantly sustained, symphonically-developed piece of sensuous music.

The Lost Hours

Afternoon Tea

Afternoon Tea has predominantly been seen as the preserve of women, and has sometimes suffered from stigmatisation as a frivolous, unnecessary hiatus in the day. But is this delightful ritual in decline because more women work these days ponders Martin, and what of the fraught class tangle of low tea versus high tea? The former, in fact, being posher than the latter - who knew? Martin uncovers all, by way of outings to the Ritz, the Waldorf, and of course Bettys Café in York.

The Lost Hours is a series of essays about how the day used not to be so monolithic; about how it was punctuated by rituals that lent a character to different hours. All the rituals described seem to be in decline, but none can be written off completely. And, a cheering thought, perhaps some will revive post-Covid as we rediscover the social possibilities of our days. Gabriel Fauré (1845-1924)

A Position of Importance

Fauré's achievements are recognised at last by the Parisian musical establishment. Presented by Donald Macleod.

Gabriel Fauré's story begins during the second half of the 19th century, when the musical world was dominated by the heavily romantic voices of composers like Wagner, Brahms and Liszt. Fauré became a key protagonist in a musical revolution that opened audiences' ears to new modes of expression - modern, refined and utterly French. As a composer, and as a teacher at the Paris Conservatoire, he left a huge legacy on the music of the 20th century. This week Donald Macleod explores some of the many turning points in Fauré's career, and how those events affected his life and his art.

One thing seemed to be eluding Fauré: proper recognition by the musical establishment in France. His name was put forward to be considered for the post of Professor of Composition at the Paris Conservatoire but the Director, Ambroise Thomas, declared, "Never! If he's appointed, I'll resign." However, once Dubois took over as Director, Fauré was appointed to the staff of the conservatoire, where he had a significant impact upon future generations. It was during this same period, the decade of the 1890s, that Fauré started to visit the United Kingdom.

Beethoven, Turnage, Chin, Stravinsky

Bold juxtapositions and musical mirrors characterise this concert from the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra and their chief conductor Ryan Wigglesworth. Stravinsky's Greek-inspired ballet 'Orpheus' is as melodious as it is sardonic, reflecting the classical sound-world of Beethoven. Unsuk Chin's highly-compressed Beethoven-inspired overture 'con subito forza' forms an echo to Beethoven's own Leonore Overture No 2, which opens the concert. And at the centre of the evening sits a passionate, existential roar of a saxophone concerto by Mark-Anthony Turnage. Saxophonist Martin Robertson becomes the protagonist of Samuel Beckett's monologue, 'Rockaby' in one of the most deeply colourful and dynamic concertos for the instrument ever written.

THU 22:45 The Essay (m0010wxp)

The Lost Hours

The Lost Hours of the Afternoon

Afternoons are out of fashion. There is a melancholia about the afternoon - a sense of torpor. The gradual displacement of am and pm by the twenty-four-hour clock reduces the significance of 'afternoon', which can now seem just a long slog between lunch and the first drink of the day. There are 'morning people' and 'night people', but are there still 'afternoon people'? Novelist Andrew Martin considers all of the above.

The Lost Hours is a series of essays about how the day used not to be so monolithic; about how it was punctuated by rituals that lent a character to different hours. All the rituals described seem to be in decline, but none can be written off completely. And, a cheering thought, perhaps some will revive post-Covid as we rediscover the social possibilities of our days. They reflect a way of life both more leisured and more regimented, and one of their virtues might be that as well as enriching our days they actually slow them down too, and paradoxically give us more time.

Unclassified Live: Erased Tapes x BBC Philharmonic at Fat Out Fest

Join Elizabeth Alker at Peel Hall in Salford for an evening of genre-blurring musical collaboration recorded on the opening night of Fat Out Fest. Erased Tapes artists Penguin Cafe, Rival Consoles, Douglas Dare and Hatis Noit join members of the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra on stage to trade songs and premiere specially-arranged reworkings of their music.

Erased Tapes was formed in 2007 by Robert Raths and has been a key player in the melding of the contemporary classical and ambient electronic scenes over the past decade. At Fat Out, a quartet of both established and newly-signed label artists join together for a unique in-the-round performance led by local conductor Ellie Slorach.

In the music of Japanese vocalist Hatis Noit we encounter the sounds of experimental and classical traditions as well as sacred chant idioms, folk styles and avant-garde approaches, all of which are delicately layered and intuitively combined. Fellow Londoner and labelmate Rival Consoles, meanwhile, creates synthesiser journeys in which energy and rhythmic optimism are balanced by a harmonic palette shot through with wistfulness. Joining them are Douglas Dare whose modern chamber music brings sublime fragility and poise, as well as Penguin Cafe, the pared-down continuation of the legendary avant-pop orchestra led by Arthur Jeffes.

Director

Fauré brings reform and consternation to France's leading music school. With Donald Macleod.

Gabriel Fauré's story begins during the second half of the 19th century, when the musical world was dominated by the heavily romantic voices of composers like Wagner, Brahms and Liszt. Fauré became a key protagonist in a musical revolution that opened audiences' ears to new modes of expression - modern, refined and utterly French. This week Donald Macleod explores some of the many turning points in Fauré's career, and how those events affected his life and his art.

The year 1905 began a period of around 15 years when Gabriel Fauré held the post of Director of the Paris Conservatoire. He launched a series of significant reforms to eliminate the bureaucracy, broaden the repertoire studied, and appointed more progressive musicians to the staff including Debussy and Dukas. These changes were not received well by all the staff, and Fauré earned himself the name of Robespierre. With his attention firmly on his role as director, this left little time for composing, although it was a period he at last composed an opera, Pénélope, which was hailed by the Parisian critics as a masterpiece.

Verdi's Requiem in Birmingham

The one with THAT Dies Irae, Verdi's Requiem is arguably more opera than church. From a terrifying day of judgement to bouncing angels and an ending that seems to offer crossed fingers rather than comfort, Verdi threw almost every dramatic device he could at his masterpiece. Remarkably, the first performance was a religious service officiated by a priest - for all the theatre, Verdi's sincerity was unquestionable. This electrifying mixture continues to thrill concert hall audiences, with its soaring solos, gripping chorus and rib-shaking bass courtesy of an upright serpent and a gigantic bass drum. Zadie Smith

Ian McMillan presents a special extended interview with Zadie Smith. Her audacious first book 'White Teeth', written when she was just 24, was one of the most talked about debut novels of all time. Most of Smith's novels take place in North West London, where she grew up, and which she has described as the location of her imagination, and her heart. In her latest novel 'The Fraud', also set in the area, Smith moves into historical fiction with a story inspired by an extraordinary real life court case.

FRI 22:45 The Essay (m0010y64)

The Lost Hours

The Cocktail Hour

Do people still observe the cocktail hour? Modern drinks parties are less formal than they used to be, but cocktails certainly still feature heavily. Novelist Andrew Martin discusses the sherry parties he attended at Oxford University, sometimes with disastrous consequences, and his envy of those who were 'going on', presumably somewhere more interesting and more glamorous. Cocktail parties sound sophisticated - is there a working-class equivalent he asks? He looks at what the young call 'pre-drinks' or 'pre's', a utilitarian name for the practical business of getting drunk with one's friends on cheap wine, before heading off somewhere where wine will be more expensive and scarce. Other evening rituals are also considered. Are the supper-party with its occasionally louche associations, along with the ineffably French custom of the cinq-a-sept, in decline or are they here to stay?

The Lost Hours is a series of essays about how the day used not to be so monolithic; about how it was punctuated by rituals that lent a character to different hours. All the rituals described seem to be in decline, but none can be written off completely. And, a cheering thought, perhaps some will revive post-Covid as we rediscover the social possibilities of our days. They reflect a way of life both more leisured and more regimented, and one of their virtues might be that as well as enriching our days they actually slow them down too, and paradoxically give us more time.

Reverend Kristin Michael Hayter's mixtape

Prepare to be saved! Verity Sharp shares a salvation-seeking mixtape from Reverend Kristin Michael Hayter.

A notoriously powerful performer, Hayter's work has traversed sounds and genres - from baroque to black metal, classical to harsh noise, electronics to spiritual - but always with a core of emotional lyrics and compelling, sometimes disturbing, imagery. As an artist, she has been heavily influenced by religious themes, particularly Roman Catholic iconography and concepts of divine retribution.

From 2017 to 2023, Hayter performed under the name Lingua Ignota, a phrase coined by Hildegard von Bingen - one of her main influences. She retired that project earlier this year due to the painful nature of the associated work, and her new album is the first under her own name, which she says reflects her own personal evolution away from pain. This new work makes use of the aesthetics and language associated with the apocalypse as presented in the evangelical tradition as an analogy for personal healing. It's released under her own label Perpetual Flame Ministries, and Hayter says that on this record she reaches "new levels of unhinged, spiritually and sonically."

In her Late Junction mixtape, she weaves together the music that has impacted her sound and inspired her lyrics, featuring classical pieces from the likes of Bach and Gesualdo, as well as heavenly gospel and bluegrass, Bulgarian folk tunes and Tuareg guitar riffs. Expect reflections on heaven, challenges to Satan and a good few harpsichords.

Elsewhere in the show, Verity shares resonant clay from Bristol collective Copper Sounds, and a remastered classic by late jazz legend Pharaoh Sanders.
