Ólafur Arnalds: Series 1

Soothing music for sleep feat. Dominic Monaghan

Join Icelandic composer and pianist Ólafur Arnalds for another hour-long musical journey seeking out that elusive feeling of calm.

In this episode, Ólafur takes us on a sleepy sonic journey to the land of nod, with a selection of dreamy music. He shares music from Brambles, Debussy and Sigur Rós, and reflects on his own relationship with sleep as well as the curious nature of Icelandic lullabies.

Plus, the actor Dominic Monaghan transports us to his Safe Haven, the place where he feels the most calm, with recordings and reflections from his garden.

Beethoven's Symphony No 8 in F - Building a Library with Richard Wigmore and Andrew McGregor

Andrew McGregor with the best new recordings of classical music.

9.30 am
Pianist Charles Owen is in the studio with a clutch of exciting new releases and shares his 'On Repeat' track – a recording which he is currently listening to again and again.

10.30 am
Richard Wigmore chooses his favourite recording of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 in F, Op. 93.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 has often suffered in comparison to its immediate symphonic neighbours (when asked why people favoured the Seventh symphony over the Eighth, Beethoven replied "Because the Eighth is so much better"). In one sense the Eighth is just like all Beethoven's symphonies, each one of which is revolutionary and breaks new musical ground compared to its predecessor. This time, Beethoven's preoccupations were concision, formal subversion, ebullient energy and musical humour. Beethoven's instrumental writing is remarkable, too, and well over a century after its 1814 premiere, the Eighth impressed no less a judge than Igor

Stravinsky, who knew a thing or two about orchestration.

11.20 am
Record of the Week: Andrew's top pick.

SAT 11:45 Music Matters (m001r90k)
Krystian Zimerman and Randall Goosby

Presenter Sara Mohr-Pietsch speaks to the enigmatic Polish pianist Krystian Zimerman who, for many, is one of the world's greatest pianists. Zimerman gives few concerts each year - and even fewer interviews - but has a deep connection with both the music he plays and the inner workings of his instrument. He's known to build his own pianos to exacting standards, and travels with them around the world - he speaks to Sara about how he believes music isn't actually sound, why he fears classical music and diplomacy is dying, and why he's in love with the music of Karol Szymanowski.

The superstar American violinist Randall Goosby joins Sara from his home in Virginia Beach. Despite still being in his 20s, Goosby has become one of the world's most in demand violinists, acclaimed for the sensitivity of his playing and commitment to make music more inclusive. He talks to Sara about why playing golf helps him as a musician, how some of the great vocalists have improved his playing, why we need to bring the fun back into classical music, and how chicken nuggets brought him together with his teacher Itzhak Perlman.

Sara visits the Science Museum in London where a new exhibition exploring how music shapes our lives - Turn it up: The Power Of Music - is set to open its doors to the public next week. She's shown around by curator Steven Leech, who introduces Sara to the central ideas behind the exhibition, and is joined by fellow Radio 3 presenter and bassoonist, Linton Stephens, to hear what insights it might hold for a professional musician.

Linton discusses, too, 31 sketches of Black and ethnically diverse composers he's drawn and published, on both Instagram and 'X', as part of his #Blacktober series to mark and celebrate their artistry and contribution during Black History Month.

And the novelist Michel Faber joins Sara to speak about his book "Listen: On Music, Sound and Us" - a dive into how people consume music, and a meditation on how it's affected his life.

SAT 12:30 This Classical Life (m001r90x)
Jess Gillam with... Nicholas Collon

Jess Gillam meets with the conductor Nicholas Collon to share some of the music they love. Today their musical journey takes in the harmonic genius of Jacob Collier, glorious choral music by Poulenc, a youthful Octet by Mendelssohn, a dreamy song from Sibelius, Britten's iconic Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra, some grooves from Pino Palladino and Taylor Swift visits The Lakes.

Jacob Collier / Henry Mancini – Moon River
Carl Nielsen - Symphony No. 4, Op. 29 (FS76) 'The Inextinguishable'; 1. Allegro [Danish National Symphony Orchestra, Fabio Luisi]

SAT 13:00 Inside Music (m001r91g)
Pianist, composer and technologist Zubin Kanga with sounds synthesised and spectral

Zubin Kanga is a pianist, composer and technologist who is interested in how musical performers can interact with new technologies. Some of his choices reflect this, with Bach played on the synthesiser by Wendy Carlos, a live synthesiser improvisation by Suzanne Ciani, and a piece by Zubin that takes some of his recordings and turns them into something new using Artificial Intelligence.

There's also plenty of other music including a prelude by Debussy where the pianist demonstrates incredible fluid technique, motets by William Byrd, and a movement by Berlioz where the composer plays with the orchestra like it's a keyboard instrument.

Plus, a piece where Miles Davis sings on his trumpet.

A series in which each week a musician explores a selection of music - from the inside.

SAT 15:00 Sound of Cinema (m001r91w)
Rachel Portman in Conversation

In this edition of Sound of Cinema the Academy Award-winning composer Rachel Portman is the programme's special guest alongside the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Ben Palmer, in a concert given at the orchestra's Salford studio foregrounding some of Rachel's best-loved film scores. Tom McKinney is in conversation with the composer and together they look back on a rich and varied career which has provided such enduring music to popular movies such as Chocolat, Belle, The Duchess, Oliver Twist, Bel Ami, The Cider House Rules, and the Academy Award-winning Emma.

Rachel talks about working with directors Lasse Hallström, Amma Asante and Roman Polanski; about how she approaches scoring a film - her methods of creating and shaping themes to convey character and situation; about the range and variety of her work, whether a literary classic, a family adventure, or a great period drama; and she talks about how she often finds herself drawn to movies with strong female protagonists.

The programme was recorded in July before an invited audience.

Terri Lyne Carrington and Melanie Charles in concert

Kevin Le Gendre presents concert highlights from internationally in-demand American drummer and educator Terri Lyne Carrington and rising star vocalist Melanie Charles, performing as special guests with Germany's Grammy-award winning jazz orchestra the WDR big band. The music was arranged and conducted by renowned American arranger Chuck Owen and marked a coming together of highly accomplished musicians to offer a groove-laden and sonically rich performance.

Also in the programme, vocalist, multidisciplinary artist and co-founder of the US-based, Afro-Caribbean, women-led experimental trio Nite Bjuiti shares her inspirations. Based in New York, and born to Jamaican parents, Candice's practise is deeply embedded in explorations of the untold stories of her heritage. She has worked with greats from across the musical spectrum including Wynton Marsalis, Lalah Hathaway, Chaka Khan and Lin-Manuel Miranda. Her latest project, Nite Bjuiti, is a collaboration between Candice, GRAMMY-nominated sound chemist Val Jeanty and bassist Mimi Jones. Together they blend voice, bass, electro percussion, turntables and Haitian drums to create explorative improvised music. Here Candice shares some of the music that has inspired her journey so far.

Landscape Interplay

Corey Mwamba presents free jazz and improvised interactions with a variety of environments, from a conversation between voice and wind to the sound of seeds popping in the heat of Wanstead Flats, London, plus a sound poem by the duo Blanc Seool.

The collaborative project of Hannah White and Stephen Shiel, Blanc Seool has just released a new album entitled Follow Your Ears. It's a project rooted in the pair's deep listening practice and involves the weaving-together of field recordings and improvisations on amplified objects, voice and waterphone. With a preview of his forthcoming album I Was Too Young To Hear Silence comes saxophonist Patrick Shiroishi, meanwhile, who treats us to a long solo improvisation recorded late at night inside the cavernous parking structure below a hotpot restaurant in Monterey Park, California, a place he defines as "a vacant space for a new kind of collaboration - between saxophone and silence, between noise and reverberation."

Elsewhere in the show, we listen to a track that Estonian-Latvian avant garde vocalist, eOnora sent in via the Freeness inbox. Taken from her new album Tuulajamuud, the piece captures the spontaneous interaction between eOnora and the wind blowing through some pipes, somewhere outside, at a location she says she's now forgotten.

Brian Cox

Brian Cox has enjoyed a prolific career in theatre, film and television over the last sixty years, working with the most esteemed theatre companies and renowned Hollywood and TV directors.

Born in Dundee, he was obsessed by film from an early age and after seeing Albert Finney in Saturday Night and Sunday Morning decided he could make a go of it too. Over the years he's never been afraid to take on difficult, unlikeable characters, including Hannibal Lector in Manhunter, Hermann Göring in Nuremberg and most recently the terrifying media tycoon and patriarch Logan Roy in the TV series Succession, for which he won a Golden Globe.

His vast number of roles are testament to his versatility: starring in comedies Super Troopers and Rushmore, period dramas Troy and Braveheart, the Bourne action thrillers and the superhero film X2.

A classically trained Shakespearean actor, Brian has also played King Lear at the National and won Olivier awards for his performances in Titus Andronicus and Rat in the Skull. He is currently appearing as Johann Sebastian Bach in a play called The Score at the Theatre Royal, Bath.

His musical choices include Bach, Mahler, Verdi and Joni Mitchell.

SUN 17:00 The Listening Service (m001620p)

Song Cycles and Concept Albums

Tom Service explores the world of the song cycle - from the tortured passions and existential angst of Beethoven and Schubert's protagonists in 19th-century Vienna, to Frank Sinatra and Nat King Cole's ebullient takes on the genre with the birth of the concept album, and Kate Bush's groundbreaking experimental pop suite The Ninth Wave.

Our witness today is composer Emily Hall whose work Life Cycle, written with Toby Litt for singer Mara Carlyle, explores the theme of motherhood.

Work and Play

Eight minutes Idle is writer Matt Thorne's evocation of office life. Herman Melville's Bartleby preferred not to do what his office boss asked for, whilst in The Mill on the Floss, Maggie Tulliver enjoys sliding down heaps of grain in the mill and playing with spiders' webs. Other readings in this episode exploring work and play convey the toil of blacksmiths, mowing and reaping in works by Dickens, Wordsworth and Robert Frost, and the experience of being self-employed is wittily described in a poem by LL Barkat. Our readers are Tommy Sim'aan and Julia Winwood and we hear music by Dvořák, Eric Coates, Alexander Mosolov, Van Morrison and Dolly Parton.

The Ancient Algorithm

The ancient alphabet of runes was used all over Northern Europe for over a thousand years. Carved into stone, wood and bone, this spiky, straight-edged alphabet evokes the humour, mystery, love, and everyday lives of those who wrote with it. From Vikings to school children, housekeepers to mercenaries, and earls, priests, and traders, runes were accessible to many. These letters conjure the whole gamut of humanity in some of the most remote landscapes of the North, if we can just interpret them.

On the ocean-battered shores of Orkney, historian of Mediaeval Norse, Dr Eleanor Rosamund Barraclough, brings these charismatic letters to life. What are runes and why were they so widespread? And what is it about them that so fascinates us today?

Eleanor goes under the earth at Maeshowe, the Neolithic burial chamber in Orkney, to discover some rather bawdy graffiti and crawls into a lesser-known chamber to uncover a mystery. There are memorial rune stones looming large, runic riddles to decipher, and a stolen lion in Venice makes an appearance. Einar Selvik, of the band Wardruna, serenades us with a lute and Judith Glue takes us to the back of her shop to weave runes into jumpers fit for arctic explorers. We pour over new finds and old stone, searching for a glimpse of the people who carved them several centuries ago.

In their accessibility and mystery, runes are an ancient alphabet, and maybe an ancient algorithm for solving life's everyday concerns.

With contributions from Joanne Harris, Professor Judith Jesch, Dr Andrea Freund, Dr Ragnhild Ljosland, Judith Glue, Dr Jonas Norby, and Einar Selvik of Wardruna. Thanks also to the Orkney Museum and Scottish Heritage.

The Tempest

In The Tempest, Shakespeare's explores the relationship between humanity, the environment and our connection with nature. A Scottish cast is led by Ian McDiarmid as Prospero in this play of magic, romance and revenge, situated within the context of our current global climate crisis. Audiences are transported to Prospero's island of chaos and disorder; the island is 'full of noises' and the play's cataclysmic opening storm is created out of news items about the climate emergency.

As Shakespeare's most musical play, original Scottish music composed by Pippa Murphy interweaves throughout - to ethereal and magical effect, - enhanced by Ariel's songs realised in binaural sound.

Vocal Music and Sacred Traditions

Cellist, kora player and composer Tunde Jegede continues his celebration of the classical musics of Africa, focusing on a variety of vocal traditions from across the continent. From the Senegalese Sufi incantations of Ida Faye to the trance-inducing Gnawa music of Morocco's Mahmoud Guinia, Jegede considers how the use of musical devices like repetition and subtle variation help to serve the spiritual purpose of the singers.

"The voice is really the first instrument and it carries so much of a people and culture's identity, memory and spirit. It bridges from the sacred to the secular and in many societies holds the thread of nationhood." - Tunde Jegede

Errollyn Wallen

Roots

Donald Macleod chats to composer Errollyn Wallen about her heritage and musical upbringing.

Belize-born British composer Errollyn Wallen has been called a "renaissance woman of contemporary music". She's a remarkably versatile and prolific composer, pianist and songwriter and one of our most in-demand musical voices today. She was the first black woman to have a piece performed at the Proms in 1998 and her music opened the 2012 Paralympic games. She's even been performed in space, aboard NASA's STS115 mission. Wallen writes in a kaleidoscopic range of styles; her music constantly crosses and re-crosses musical boundaries and it brims over with a sense of adventure and delight. All this week, Donald Macleod gets to know Errollyn as she dials into his studio from her Scottish lighthouse where she retreats to concentrate on her work.

Today, we hear about Errollyn's deep connection to Belize and her childhood musical memories. She was brought up in London to a soundtrack of Ella Fitzgerald and calypso. When she discovered the piano, she had to be begged not to practice. Errollyn's first ever composition was written for her sisters to sing walking to primary school, and family has since been a thread through her work.

As Théotime Langlois de Swarte says, it was whilst studying modern violin at the Paris Conservatoire that he realised, "that this was what I really want to do in my life – to find forgotten composers, and to express myself through their music as if it were mine, written yesterday."

Five Cellos: Lost and Found

The Soul of Music

Writer, musician and broadcaster Kate Kennedy takes a personal look at five lost cellos, and what they can tell us of those who played and loved them and how our identities are shaped by the physical, social and psychological impacts of performance.

Can a cello hold its player's soul? Jewish-Hungarian Pal Hermann was hailed as 'the next Pablo Casals' in the 1930s. He is now completely forgotten. Kate Kennedy retraces his steps across Europe, with his unique Gagliano cello as he attempted to escape the Nazis, from Berlin to Paris, to Toulouse and finally to Lithuania. Hermann's cello has been lost since 1952, but the key to finding it, she discovers, is an inscription burnt into the side of it. 'I am the soul of music'. She reflects on her quest to find Hermann's soul, his cello, and how near we can get to recovering a great and neglected musician himself.

TUE 13:00 Radio 3 Lunchtime Concert (m001r894)
Cotswolds Festivals (1/4)

Sarah Walker presents a selection of highlights from the 2023 Chipping Campden and Tetbury Festivals. From the Takács Quartet, we hear Haydn's Op 77 No 2, the final quartet he completed - a favourite of chamber players, for its masterful development of ideas, searching themes and musical jokes. To follow, pianist Isata Kanneh-Mason performs Chopin's late sonata, his Opus 58, considered to be one of his most difficult and dynamic of his compositions. Although frantic energy permeates the work, we find respite in a beautiful nocturne-like slow movement.

Victorian colour, jewellery and metalwork

Man-made gems are the subject of research being undertaken by jeweller Sofie Boons. She joins presenter Nandini Das alongside Matthew Winterbottom, the curator of an exhibition at the Ashmolean Museum in Oxford which explores the explosion of colour in design, textiles, paintings and jewellery in the Victorian period. Dinah Roe has been looking at the way colour infuses the pages of Victorian literature and in 1773, Birmingham Assay Office was founded to provide testing and hallmarking of precious metal items - Chris Corker from the University of York has been researching that history.

Colour Revolution at the Ashmolean Museum in Oxford runs until 18 Feb 2024 and Matthew Winterbottom is its co-curator and Assistant Keeper, Curator of Decorative Arts and Sculpture at the Ashmolean.

You can find out more about "the alchemical jeweller" at <https://sofieboons.com/>

Dr Chris Corker lectures at the School for Business and Society at the University of York and you can hear more about his research in a previous episode of Free Thinking called Tin cans, cutlery and sewing <https://www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/m001jcr0>
Dinah Roe is Reader in Nineteenth Century Literature at Oxford Brookes University. You can hear her discussing the writing and artwork of the Rosetti family which was displayed in an exhibition at Tate Britain in a previous episode of Free Thinking.

Nandini Das is a historian and New Generation Thinker based at the University of Oxford. Five Cellos: Lost and Found

The Bee Cello

Writer and musician Kate Kennedy takes a personal look at five lost cellos, and what they can tell us of those who played and loved them and how our identities are shaped by the physical, social and psychological impacts of performance

An abandoned cello rescued from a skip stands alone under a pergola in an orchard of a stately home on the outskirts of Nottingham. In an eccentric experiment, created by one of the world experts in honeybees, apiarist and physicist Prof. Martin Bencsik has donated the instrument to 400,000 bees who now live very happily inside the cello. Kate Kennedy reflects on how the colony has 'improved' the cello's design by gluing wax onto specific resonant parts whilst the intelligent bees' buzzing, duets with the cello as the wind whistles through its strings in its exposed location. This is the story of sharing vibrations with them, sharing music, and learning what a cello means to a community of bees.

Errollyn Wallen

Finding New Feet

Donald Macleod and composer Errollyn Wallen discuss her breakthrough into the musical world.

Belize-born British composer Errollyn Wallen has been called a "renaissance woman of contemporary music". She's a remarkably versatile and prolific composer, pianist and songwriter and one of our most in-demand musical voices today. She was the first black woman to have a piece performed at the Proms in 1998 and her music opened the 2012 Paralympic games. She's even been performed in space, aboard NASA's STS115 mission. Wallen writes in a kaleidoscopic range of styles; her music constantly crosses and re-crosses musical boundaries and it brims over with a sense of adventure and delight. All this week, Donald Macleod gets to know Errollyn as she dials into his studio from her Scottish lighthouse where she retreats to concentrate on her work.

Today, we hear from Errollyn about her colourful early career in London as a keyboardist in bands, and writing music for a TV gameshow. She and Donald also discuss the challenge of breaking through as a serious composer. Plus, we hear about life in Errollyn's lighthouse, and how she ended up living there.

Worlds within worlds

From Bridgewater Hall, Manchester
Presented by Tom McKinney

In a programme book-ended by the power of the sea, this concert explores and celebrates the ability of an orchestra to create soundscape, energy and atmosphere. Haydn's breathtakingly prophetic dark and turbulent overture to his opera L'isola disabitata (The uninhabited island) is our starting point for a journey which culminates in the raw power and intricate colour of Debussy's La Mer.

In Anna Thorvaldsdottir's ARCHORA, premiered by the BBC Philharmonic and Eva Ollikainen at last year's BBC Proms, she creates "a world both familiar and strange ... an omnipresent parallel realm". Using the full colour and expressive force of the orchestra we are drawn into an immersive experience in a score which she subtiles "Worlds within worlds".

Hailed by the Washington Post as "one of the finest pianists in the world", Richard Goode brings his insightful spark and finesse to Mozart's Piano Concerto K 456.

Bach's view of the body and how that comes through in his cantatas is being studied by violinist and contributor to Radio 3's Early Music Show, Mark Seow. He joins presenter Naomi Paxton and historians of medicine Alanna Skuse and Michelle Pfeffer, alongside evolutionary biochemist Nick Lane. Together they look at music, metaphors and the idea that vital bodily fluids (blood, phlegm, yellow bile, and black bile) and links with five elements (earth, water, fire, air, and space) could regulate our health.

Producer: Luke Mulhall

Alanna Skuse is an Associate Professor at the University of Reading. She has researched representations of self-wounding in plays, ballads, moral writings and medical texts from 1580-1740. Five Cellos: Lost and Found

The Auschwitz Cello

Writer and musician Kate Kennedy takes a personal look at five lost cellos, and what they can tell us of those who played and loved them and how our identities are shaped by the physical, social and psychological impacts of performance.

What does it mean to be saved by an instrument? Anita Lasker-Wallfisch became known as the cellist of Auschwitz. Her beloved Ventepane cello disappeared at the same time as her parents were taken by the Nazis from her home in Breslau (now Wrocław). When she was sent to Auschwitz, she narrowly avoided death by being recruited to the camp orchestra and filling the vacant role of cellist. Kate Kennedy working with archivists, finds the hut in which Anita practised with the other musicians, seeking answers as to why there was cello in Auschwitz, who had previously played it - whilst reflecting on how being saved by a cello, changes your relationship to the instrument.

Burlesque at BBC NOW

Fiona Monbet joins the BBC National Orchestra of Wales for a much-anticipated second collaboration. Monbet, an Irish-French musician, combines her skills as conductor, composer, and violinist in the world Premiere of her work Faubourg 23, for which she and the orchestra are joined by her quartet. Fusing classical, folk, and jazz, the piece incorporates Musette, Django Reinhardt and Josephine Baker.

The build up to that piece takes us to post-WWI Paris; Jacques Ibert's suite of music which he compiled from his surreal incidental music to the theatrical farce 'The Italian Straw Hat', Erik Satie's beautifully eccentric ballet and dance-hall parody which he wrote for Jean Cocteau, and Darius Milhaud's Le Bœuf sur le toit, which gave its name to the Parisian nightclub which became the favourite haunt of the cutting-edge artists of the Paris scene. Also on the bill are Tailleferre's delightful Petite Suite, and Bernstein's evocation of 1940s New York in the three dance episodes which he extracted from the first musical he wrote for Broadway – On The Town.

Presented by Linton Stephens. Live from BBC Hoddinott Hall, Cardiff.

Ibert: Divertissement
Satie: La belle excentrique
Tailleferre: Petite Suite
Milhaud: Le Bœuf sur le toit, Op 58

Valis and Philip K Dick

A series of revelatory hallucinations that Philip K Dick experienced in 1974, radically altering his view of belief, time and history, were the inspiration for his quasi-autobiographical novel Valis which was published in 1981. Roger Luckhurst and Sarah Dillon join Matthew Sweet to unravel this deeply strange book and to discuss how Dick's experience of mental illness and his tireless attempts at self-diagnosis thread their way through his novels and short stories, despite being largely absent from the many film and TV adaptations of his work, including Blade Runner, Total Recall and Minority Report.

Five Cellos: Lost and Found

The Shipwrecked Cello

Writer and musician Kate Kennedy takes a personal look at five lost cellos, and what they can tell us of those who played and loved them and how our identities are shaped by the physical, social and psychological impacts of performance.

Destroyed and resurrected, how does an instrument's identity change? The 'Mara' Stradivarius is one of the greatest cellos in the world, but in the 1960s it was completely destroyed when the Trieste Trio nearly drowned jumping with it from a burning boat in thick fog into the River Plate. In travelling to Trieste, Kate Kennedy discovers how the Trio's mental escape into a world of music during the second world war, shutting out the massacres around them, helped them to survive the accident that killed 55 others. She reflects on the cello's unlikely rescue and lengthy reconstruction and how in the aftermath of its turbulent history its sound is considered by many to be better than ever.

Past Lives, Future Sounds

Elizabeth Alker with new ambient and electronic music that reconfigures the past.

Grime, dancehall, grunge guitar and hip hop aesthetics are just some of the sounds and styles that coalesce in Gaika's new album Drift. The South London wordsmith and producer offers notes on past lives and contemporary existence in a weave of poetry embedded in nostalgic musical textures. Hot off the back of a summer's touring, meanwhile, Ross From Friends brings a retro UKG energy to tonight's show's playlist with his ever-evolving take on garage rhythms and vocals. And Galya Bisengalieva conjures elegiac landscapes of sound in her latest release, Polygon, a musical ode to the people, places and beings affected by the nuclear fallout from the Semipalatinsk Test Site on the steppe in north east Kazakhstan. The sound of the Kazakh-British composer's violin sighs and laments amongst pulsating electronic textures.

Errollyn Wallen

Public and Private

Donald Macleod and Errollyn Wallen discuss the role of the composer in today's world.

Belize-born British composer Errollyn Wallen has been called a "renaissance woman of contemporary music". She's a remarkably versatile and prolific composer, pianist and songwriter and one of our most in-demand musical voices today. She was the first black woman to have a piece performed at the Proms in 1998 and her music opened the 2012 Paralympic games. She's even been performed in space, aboard NASA's STS115 mission. Wallen writes in a kaleidoscopic range of styles; her music constantly crosses and re-crosses musical boundaries and it brims over with a sense of adventure and delight. All this week, Donald Macleod gets to know Errollyn as she dials into his studio from her Scottish lighthouse where she retreats to concentrate on her work.

Today, Donald and Errollyn talk about some of her most public and meaningful commissions, marking large events and anniversaries, as well as pieces dedicated to people close to her. She speaks about the importance of a composer being "in the world" and her role in reflecting society through music. We hear about her daily life as a composer, and how she feels the world of classical music is changing for the future.

Five Cellos: Lost and Found

The Flat-Pack Cello

Writer and musician Kate Kennedy takes a personal look at five lost cellos, and what they can tell us of those who played and loved them and how our identities are shaped by the physical, social and psychological impacts of performance

What happens when you re-imagine what a cello can be? From pieces of derelict instruments, and offcuts of wood, along with cutting edge technology, Kate Kennedy is making a prototype of a new, hybrid cello, that looks nothing like we might expect. This is a cello whose story is yet to begin.

Working amidst the wood shavings and priceless instruments in the historic workshop of Hill and Sons, the cello parts are destined for a youth orchestra in Argentina and designed to be easily reassembled by the young players. Every aspect of the instrument has been re-imagined. As Kate stumblingly creates the very first cello for them, getting to know a cello's every contour, she reflects on perhaps the weirdest cello ever made, and its role as an instrument for the future, shaping young lives, and telling new stories.
