Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto in Building a Library with William Mival and Hannah French

Hannah French with the best new recordings of classical music.

9.30 am

Violinist Jennifer Pike shares some new releases which have caught her ear and shares her 'On Repeat' track - a recording which she is currently listening to again and again.

Building a Library: William Mival chooses his favourite recording of Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto.

When it first appeared on the scene, one influential critic said this concerto "brought us face to face with the revolting thought that music can exist which stinks to the ear", labelling the last movement "odourously Russian". But public opinion is in strong disagreement. Nowadays, Tchaikovsky's evergreen concerto is one of the most uplifting, joyful and popular in the repertoire.

11.20 am

Record of the Week: Hannah's top pick.

Bernstein film Maestro, Linda Catlin Smith, Tomorrow's Warriors

Ahead of the release of Maestro, Bradley Cooper's long-awaited film about Leonard Bernstein, Sara Mohr-Pietsch talks to the conductor and composer's daughters - Jamie and Nina - about their parents' relationship, listening to music with their father as children, and how it feels to see their lives recreated on screen. Sara is joined by critics Jessica Duchan and Lillian Crawford who share their thoughts, among other things, about Bradley Cooper's conducting of Mahler's Second Symphony in Ely Cathedral - a central scene in the film.

Sara talks to American/Canadian composer Linda Catlin Smith about a new recording of her chamber works by long-time collaborators Thin Edge New Music Collective. Linda has become a leading voice in Canadian musical culture and she tells Sara about her love of spacious and sparse music, and how stepping away from her composition to weed or wash-up can inspire new ideas.

Tomorrow's Warriors is an organisation which has supported and nurtured young musicians in jazz for over 30 years, including artists such as Soweto Kinch, Nubya Garcia, Moses Boyd, Shabaka Hutchings and recent Mercury Prize winners Ezra Collective. Sara meets its co-founders, Gary Crosby and Janine Irons, to talk about how Tomorrow's Warriors began, how they've gone on to have such a big impact on the UK jazz scene, and the vital need for young people to have access to musical experiences.

Soprano Seljan Nasibli takes us on a musical journey

Seljan Nasibli shares a selection of music that spans time and space, from one of her own recordings that brings back memories of cold snowy landscapes outside the studio in Ukraine in 2017, to George Gershwin's American in Paris.

She also reveals her affinity with Portuguese Fado singing, and introduces music reflecting her Azerbaijani roots including Legend of Love by composer Arif Melikov and a song performed by vocalist Alim Qasimov, Yo-Yo Ma and the Silk Road Ensemble.

Plus, operatic gems include Verdi's Overture to Attila, Renée Fleming singing Massenet's Thaïs, Handel's Semele and more...

A series in which each week a musician explores a selection of music - from the inside.

Erlanger's L'Aube rouge

From the 2023 Wexford Festival: a tragic love triangle among Russian anarchists in France, starring Andreea Soare and Andrew Morstein as star-crossed lovers Olga and Serge. Presented by Sean Rafferty.

The mission of Wexford Festival Opera in Ireland is to discover and stage forgotten operatic masterpieces. Today French composer Camille Erlanger (1863-1919) is more forgotten than most, but he wrote nine operas for houses including the Paris Opéra and his fame spread far and wide: he has a street named after him in Quebec City. L'Aube rouge (The Red Dawn) was premiered in Rouen in 1911 and its passionate music tells a classic Romeo-and-Juliet story of love across political divides - Serge is the leader of a group of anarchists, Olga the daughter of the general who's sworn to destroy them.

The Ivors Classical Awards 2023

The Ivors Classical Awards 2023 - a celebration of the best new classical music and sound art by British, Irish or UK resident composers.

Hannah Peel and Tom Service hosted this year's awards ceremony at BFI Southbank on Tuesday evening.

Previously known as The Ivors Composer Awards and before that the British Composer Awards, the event is always lively and topical and is a brilliant introduction to the world of new music. 11 Ivor Novello Awards will be presented to eight category winners and three Gift of the Academy Award winners. One of the Gift of the Academy Awards goes to the much-loved composer John Rutter who will be awarded the prestigious Academy Fellowship,

The nominated works paint a picture of the topics and issues that are important to people today, ranging from the disco era's safe spaces for LGBTQIA+ individuals (Jasper Dommert Disco! Disco! Good! Good?) to sugar plantations and the writings of Ocean Vuong (Hannah Kendall shouting forever into the receiver and Even sweetness can scratch the throat). Some of the composers have used their works to tell the stories of real people, including artist and AIDS activist David Wojnarowicz (Philip Venables Answer Machine Tape, 1987) and JFK's sister Rosemary Kennedy (Brian Irvine Least Like The Other: Searching for Rosemary Kennedy), whereas others gain inspiration from ancient texts (Bushra El-Turk Ka and Athanasia Kontou Antigone: Pure in her crime).

Poetry plays an important role in some of the nominated pieces, including Thomas Adès' Növények which is a setting of seven poems by four Hungarian poets, Omri Kochavi's Kishtatos Hess Amira poet Israeli by text new a features which מישתתוס | and Naomi Pinnock's Landscape takes inspiration from Louise Glück's set of five poems. Similarly, Elliptics by Emily Howard is a setting of a poem with the same name by Michael Symmons Roberts, and Comme l'espoir/you might all disappear by Josephine Stephenson is based on a short French poem by Antoine Thiollier. Scientific literature is also linked to some of the nominated works, with Brett Dean's In This Brief Moment using The Origin of Species by Charles Darwin as a starting point, and Newton Armstrong was influenced by Rachel Carson's In The Sea Around Us for his work The Book of the Sediments.

Matana Roberts

Corey Mwamba presents the best in new improvised music. Matana Roberts joins the programme to share how they listen to history as a personal and artistic practice: "If people really listened, some of the things that we are currently experiencing wouldn't be happening. You can look at the rhythm of a moment in history and understand the layers that push things to a certain point. That's how I listen to history."

Their newest release is Coin Coin Chapter Five: In The Garden..., an immersive world of poetic witnessing, interwoven folk songs, blues, and improvisation. It's the latest addition of their Coin Coin project - a long song of America, refracted through prisms of familial stories, archival research and collective memories stored in sound. This chapter explores the story of a woman in their ancestral line who died following complications from an illegal abortion, through which they ask broader questions around reproductive justice and bodily autonomy today: "I'm trying to be in the chain link of artists who are trying to create work that is a testament to a lineage and a culture."

A vibrant Sunday selection of classical music

Sarah Walker chooses three hours of attractive and uplifting music to complement your morning.

Today's choices include a resonant Bach arrangement from trumpet player Alison Balsom, a mystical blend of choir and organ by Pierre Vilete, and a Doreen Carwithen sonata that sparkles in the hands of pianist Bengt Forsberg.

There's also a delicate pavane composed by a 16th-century Milanese lutenist, and a vivid orchestral work by Ravel that draws on his Spanish heritage.

And while Eric Coates organises some wedding entertainment, William Alwyn takes a musical trip to the Cotswolds...

Daniel Handler

The best-selling American writer Daniel Handler is perhaps better known by his pen name, Lemony Snicket.

Lemony is the cynical narrator of a thirteen book saga called A Series of Unfortunate Events. It's the tale of three unlucky orphans, Violet, Klaus and Sonny Baudelaire, who are hounded by their guardian, the sinister Count Olaf. The books are a phenomenon, selling more than 70 million copies around the world, along with a film starring Jim Carrey and a series on Netflix.

Lemony has published many more books for children, and Daniel has also written seven novels for adults under his own name, as well as a screenplay inspired by Verdi's Rigoletto.

He's also a keen accordion player and has performed with bands including Death Cab for Cutie, the Decemberists and the Magnetic Fields.

Daniel has described himself as an 'unrepentant classical zealot' and his musical choices include Dvořák, Scriabin and Berlioz.

The Aleotti Mystery

Vittoria and Raffaella Aleotti were nuns and composers - but were they one person or two? Mystery and music in late 16th-century Italy, with Lucie Skeaping.

Among the music rolling off the busy printing presses of Venice in 1593 was a book of madrigals by Vittoria Aleotti and a book of motets by Raffaella Aleotti, long thought to be her sister. But after 1593 the name of Vittoria vanishes from history, whereas Raffaella became a much-honoured figure in the musical life of her native Ferrara. Lucie Skeaping investigates their history with expert commentary from Candace Smith, and presents their motets and madrigals in performances by Smith's ensemble Cappella Artemisia and special new recordings by the BBC Singers.

The Old Testament of Music

Tom Service explores J. S. Bach's extraordinary Well Tempered Clavier, a series of 48 preludes and fugues for keyboard in all 24 major and minor keys. It's widely regarded as a towering achievement and a cornerstone of western art music. The 19th century German conductor and pianist, Hans von Bülow famously described it as "The Old Testament of Music" and generations of musicians and scholars have spoken of its monumental stature in the history and development of music.

From the first, C major prelude with its lean and simple series of arpeggios, taking listeners on an exquisite harmonic journey, through to darker and more complex moments, with plenty of playfulness and joy along the way, the Well Tempered Clavier is an astonishing feat of imagination. These two books of preludes and fugues are a treasure trove, where Bach combines contrapuntal wizardry with his extraordinary gift for expressing human emotion.

With help from American pianist, Jeremy Denk, Tom Service lifts the lid on the Well Tempered Clavier to discover its secrets.

Encounters with Egypt

The pyramids, gods, and pharaohs of Ancient Egypt have inspired writers and composers for centuries - we hear from Philip Glass's Akhnaten, Mozart's The Magic Flute and, the pinnacle 19th Orientalism, Verdi's Aida, commissioned to inaugurate Cairo's opera house in 1871. Egypt's river Nile provided a sinister backdrop to one of Agatha Christie's greatest murder mysteries, and the setting of Ancient Egyptian queen Cleopatra's legendary barge journey, the source of inspiration for countless works from Shakespeare to contemporary composer Fazil Say. November 4th 1922 was when Tutankhamun's tomb was uncovered by Howard Carter.

We also explore Egypt's more recent history and culture, including the British occupation and revolution of 1952. There are Egyptian readings in Arabic from Radio 3 New Generation Thinker Islam Issa, who has helped curate and translate, and you'll hear some of Egypt's greatest musical talent, including soprano Fatma Said and famous singers of the past Oum Koulthoum and Dalida. Our readers are Samuel West and Nadi Kemp-Sayfi. You can also hear Islam talking about his book Alexandria on an episode of Free Thinking.

Afterwords - Maurice Sendak

A forest grows, we tumble into a dream and cross into Outside Over There...

Afterwords dives into the wild, feverish imagination of Maurice Sendak. The Brooklyn-born writer and artist dreamed some of the most beloved picture books of the 20th Century into being - from Where the Wild Things Are to In the Night Kitchen and

Outside Over There - these books offered a doorway into the vast inner landscapes of childhood. In this documentary, we hear archive recordings of Sendak himself alongside interviews with a Jungian analyst and poets and writers who've been inspired by his work.

Featuring the writers Frank Cottrell-Boyce, Emily Berry and Michael Rosen alongside Jungian analyst and interviewee in Jonathan Cott's 'There's a Mystery There: The Primal Vision of Maurice Sendak', Margaret Klence; art historian, artist and curator for the Maurice Sendak Foundation, Jonathan Weinberg and the president of the Maurice Sendak Foundation, Lynn Caponera. As well as archive of Studs Terkel and Terry Gross, in her radio show Fresh Air, in conversation with Sendak himself.

Episode 2: Georgia and Armenia

For many years the Ukrainian-born chief conductor of the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra, Kirill Karabits, has championed the musical heritage of his homeland, introducing it on stage to his concert audiences so that "...music lovers in Dorset may now be the most knowledgeable in the western world about the symphonic pieces of eastern Europe and central Asia".

In this series, Kirill takes us on a journey which starts in Ukraine and heads eastwards, exploring traditions, influences and connections to reveal the musical heart of this region. This second episode reflects on Shostakovich's connections in Georgia and Armenia, including a Soviet Armenian composer he admired, Aram Khachaturian; the Georgian composer Giya Kancheli, who died in his home city of Tbilisi in 2019, Georgian choral chants; and recordings from the Orthodox church tradition.

Franz Schubert (1797-1828)

Reluctant Schoolmaster

Donald Macleod explores the work of Franz Schubert, focusing on five distinct phases in the composer's life. And afterlife.

We start in 1815, the year in which Schubert turned 18 and was a reluctant schoolmaster still living under his father's roof. Although he was in many ways unhappy and constrained by his circumstances, he was still prodigiously prolific.

Bass William Thomas sings Schumann

Chamber music from Radio 3's New Generation Artists: A watery theme runs through some of this afternoon's selection of music: we'll hear songs by Schubert and Schumann sung by mezzo-soprano Ema Nikolovska and bass William Thomas. The Leonkoro Quartet plays a Purcell Fantasia before we hear pianist Alexander Gadjević in Chopin's Barcarolle. The sequence of music ends by the sea with jazz from Fergus McCreadie and Matt Carmichael in a work depicting marram grass.

Expand your horizons with classical music

Aside from his monumental works in the classical canon, Beethoven also wrote popular pieces for a bit of extra cash, and tonight's mix starts with one of his many settings of Irish folk songs. This leads into a Mozart piano duet, then Brahms's glorious sunny scherzo from his Fourth Symphony. A movement from the Philip Glass 'Heroes' symphony and a Mahler song setting completes the mix.

Bruckner's Symphony No 8 from the Lucerne Festival

The Lucerne Festival Orchestra, conducted by Yannick Nézet-Séguin, play Boulanger and Bruckner.

Presented by Fiona Talkington

Lili Boulanger: D'un soir triste
Bruckner: Symphony No. 8 in C minor (Robert Haas edition)

Lucerne Festival Orchestra
Yannick Nézet-Séguin, conductor

Yannick Nézet-Séguin is a great advocate of the work of Lili Boulanger, who died in 1918 at the age of only 24. D'un soir triste is a delicate tone painting that marks her farewell to the world: for all its beauty, it harbours a deep sadness. Anton Bruckner described his Eighth Symphony as a "mystery" — without, however, revealing its secret. "In all Bruckner symphonies there is a religious aspect: a mystical, spiritual moment," Nézet-Séguin remarks. He also sees nature as a second source of inspiration: "The trees, the streams, the flowers, the birds, the sky, the storms — all of this mixes in a very Romantic way with Bruckner's human doubts and his passions."

Concert given in the Concert Hall, KKL, Lucerne, on 19/08/2023.

MON 22:45 The Essay (m001r247)
To Odesa

1. Ears

"Each remembered moment is a keyhole. Time doesn't 'flow like a river', doesn't exist in Odesa at all; the numbers of years, 1986 or 1989 or 2006 are like signs hanging about the corner grocery shop, with names of owners, swaying. In these streets, everything is ever-present. There are places like this on the planet: you can stop in the middle of the street and stick a finger into the skin of time, tear a hole, and see through."

Across a week of personal essays, the Ukrainian-American poet Ilya Kaminsky, author of Deaf Republic, writes about the city of his birth and reflects on fatherland, mother tongue, memory, Deafness, exile and oppression. He writes about the Odesa of his childhood and his family's flight from Ukraine to the USA in the early 1990s. He writes of invasion, war, regimes and revolution. Of Odesa's poets, past and present (editing their poems in the bomb shelters). Of the statues in the city squares - Leo Tolstoy, Taras Shevchenko, Catherine the Great.

In the first essay of the week, Ilya remembers his childhood years: "Pretty much all my childhood and adolescence was spent watching the Soviet Union fall apart, but I couldn't hear, so I followed the century with my eyes. I didn't know anything different, but now I understand that I was seeing in a language of images.

"What I remember most of all is washing Leo Tolstoy's ears. The year is 1989, the mornings of Revolution, the year when my birth-country began to fall apart. His ears are larger than my head, and I am standing on the shoulders of a boy who is standing on the shoulders of another boy. I am scrubbing the enormous bearded head on a pedestal - in the centre of Tolstoy Square, one block from our first apartment."

Ilya lost most of his hearing at the age of four: "Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet dictator, is giving his speech. His mouth moves, the crowd claps, I hear nothing. I am raising the TV volume, Brezhnev makes another pronouncement, I do not hear it. It is on the day Brezhnev dies that my mother learns of my deafness, and the odyssey of doctors and hospitals begins. Strangers wear black clothes in public and I think it's for me. Thus begins the history of my deafness."

Ilya Kaminsky was born in Odesa, Ukraine in 1977, and arrived to the United States in 1993, when his family was granted asylum by the American government. He is the author of Deaf Republic (Graywolf Press) and Dancing In Odesa (Tupelo Press) and co-editor and co-translated many other books, including Ecco Anthology of International Poetry (Harper Collins), In the Hour of War: Poems from Ukraine (Arrowsmith), and Dark Elderberry Branch: Poems of Marina Tsvetaeva (Alice James Books). He currently teaches in Princeton and lives in New Jersey.

To Odesa

3. Watching

"Each remembered moment is a keyhole. Time doesn't 'flow like a river', doesn't exist in Odesa at all; the numbers of years, 1986 or 1989 or 2006 are like signs hanging about the corner grocery shop, with names of owners, swaying. In these streets, everything is ever-present. There are places like this on the planet: you can stop in the middle of the street and stick a finger into the skin of time, tear a hole, and see through."

Across a week of personal essays, the Ukrainian-American poet Ilya Kaminsky, author of Deaf Republic, writes about the city of his birth and reflects on fatherland, mother tongue, memory, Deafness, exile and oppression. He writes about the Odesa of his childhood and his family's flight from Ukraine to the USA in the early 1990s. He writes of invasion, war, regimes and revolution. Of Odesa's poets, past and present (editing their poems in the bomb shelters). Of the statues in the city squares - Leo Tolstoy, Taras Shevchenko, Catherine the Great.

In his third essay, Ilya revisits the early months of 2022 - watching the news of Ukraine from the United States: "I am watching friends waiting to lose what my family lost in 1993: a city, a language, a home."

Ilya Kaminsky was born in Odesa, Ukraine in 1977, and arrived to the United States in 1993, when his family was granted asylum by the American government. He is the author of Deaf Republic (Graywolf Press) and Dancing In Odessa (Tupelo Press) and co-editor and co-translated many other books, including Ecco Anthology of International Poetry (Harper Collins), In the Hour of War: Poems from Ukraine (Arrowsmith), and Dark Elderberry Branch: Poems of Marina Tsvetaeva (Alice James Books). He currently teaches in Princeton and lives in New Jersey.

Elgar's Symphony No 1

Edward Elgar was a shopkeeper's son from a country town, but his First Symphony spans worlds – a sweeping, multicoloured musical autobiography on a magnificent scale, burning with passion and beginning (as well as ending) with a melody you'll never forget.

Jonathan Woolgar comes from West Yorkshire, but in his award-winning Canzoni et Ricercari he travels in time to the Renaissance, unlocking new sounds of bracing power and haunting beauty.

The BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra's chief conductor Ryan Wigglesworth brings a composer's creativity to these two astonishing scores – and is joined by BBC Young Musician 2014, Martin James Bartlett, to celebrate the brilliance, the wit and the unchained inspiration of Mozart.

4. Crossing

"Each remembered moment is a keyhole. revolution. Of Odesa's poets, past and present (editing their poems in the bomb shelters). Of the statues in the city squares - Leo Tolstoy, Taras Shevchenko, Catherine the Great.

In his fourth essay, he tells the story of a visit to Ukraine during the early months of the 2022 invasion: "At the border, an endless line of cars. Between them weave women wheeling bulky suitcases, children following behind, dragging their stuffed toys which look both curious and afraid. Grannies in wheelchairs sit at the side of the road, drowsing off as soldiers check their papers. Two women spread their breakfast on the hood of a parked Zhituli. The line is going so slowly I can see what they are eating—brinza cheese, bread, cups of coffee, and hard-boiled eggs. Next to them, a couple of stray cats begging. They're everywhere: atop anti-tank fortifications, under the bushes, in the arms of the children. Pretty soon, we're motioned forward, but the women and the cats remain behind us. Perhaps they're still waiting."

Ilya Kaminsky was born in Odesa, Ukraine in 1977, and arrived to the United States in 1993, when his family was granted asylum by the American government. He is the author of Deaf Republic (Graywolf Press) and Dancing In Odessa (Tupelo Press) and co-editor and co-translated many other books, including Ecco Anthology of International Poetry (Harper Collins), In the Hour of War: Poems from Ukraine (Arrowsmith), and Dark Elderberry Branch: Poems of Marina Tsvetaeva (Alice James Books). Gazelle Twin's Listening Chair

Indulge in a little sonic escapism and submerge yourself in the healing waters of ambient and experimental music with Elizabeth Alker.

This week, she invites composer, producer, singer, and visual artist Gazelle Twin, aka Elizabeth Bernholz, to lead us on a surprising and transportive journey in deep listening. Experimental electronics meet folk-horror in Gazelle Twin's sound, which weaves together themes of the pastoral, the supernatural and the disturbing through haunting vocals and industrial drones. Her latest album Black Dog is about confronting fear, but for her Listening Chair she selects a piece of Japanese ambient from the 1980s that she listened to during a cesarean delivery a few years ago, which made the experience feel serene, safe and gentle.

Elsewhere, there's splashing waves and electronic dolphins from the late composer Joanna Brouk's early new age masterwork Sounds of the Sea, and chamber-pop from Manchester's Daniel O'Sullivan based on an apocalyptic sonnet written in the 1880s. Plus a new hypnotic work for carillon bells from New York minimalist composer Charlemagne Palestine dedicated to his collection of over 18,000 cuddly toys, which he calls his 'divinities'.

Franz Schubert (1797-1828)

Afterlife

Donald Macleod explores the work of Franz Schubert, focusing on five distinct phases in the composer's life. And afterlife.

Schubert died at the age of 31, when most people are just getting going in life – in the same decade as Keats and Byron and Shelley – and he's often thought of, with them, as an exemplar of a kind of doomed romanticism.

Central to that is a sense of having been thwarted in life – encapsulated, in Schubert's case, by the fact that so much of his music was unpublished in his lifetime, so much never even heard.

Today Donald Macleod focuses on Schubert's afterlife – the ways in which his music found an audience in the years after his early death, including the BBC's regular 'Schubert Nights' in the 1920s.

Schwarzenberg Festival 2023 (4/4)

Sarah Walker presents highlights of this year's Schubertiade, a celebration of Schubert's music held in the Austrian village of Schwarzenberg, famed for its traditional rustic wooden houses.
The concerts took place in the Angelika Kauffmann Hall, a handsome timber-framed building overlooking idyllic mountain pastures, whose exquisite acoustics and intimate atmosphere make it an ideal venue for chamber music.

Today's programme begins with a favourite from the quartet repertoire, Dvořák's "American" Quartet, written during his visit to the United States, and influenced by the melodies he found there.

Bychkov conducts Brahms

The BBC Symphony Orchestra with Semyon Bychkov in Brahms's Fourth Symphony plus Detlev Glanert's Prague Symphony, a song-symphony with soloists Catriona Morison and Christian Immler.

Live from the Barbican presented by tbc

"When you stand before me and look at me, what do you know of the pain within me? And what do I know of that within you?" When Detlev Glanert was commissioned to write a symphony for Prague, he turned to Franz Kafka - whose words, he says "spoke to me immediately". The result is a song-symphony in the tradition of Mahler that speaks directly to our time: exactly what you'd expect from this most communicative of living composers.

For this UK premiere performance, it's conducted by its dedicatee, Semyon Bychkov, who caused a sensation with the world premiere in Prague last December. He's paired it with another deeply personal Fourth Symphony by a composer who thrived on reinventing tradition - Johannes Brahms. Expect beauty, truth, and deep emotions honestly shared: in other words, a night to remember.

The Verb at Hay Festival: How to write a Novel

From blank page to bestseller, how do you write a successful novel? The Verb offers you another chance to join a masterclass in storytelling recorded earlier this year at Hay Festival, with renowned authors Kate Mosse and Philippa Gregory, best known for The Other Boleyn Girl; and Booker Prize-winning novelist Douglas Stuart.

How do you begin, how do you redraft and decide what to take out and what to leave in, what happens when you experiment and play with language to shape-shift and distort the form, how do you decide who is your narrator and uncover your own literary voice, and how do you know when the novel is finished?

Ian McMillan takes us on a deep dive into the craft of writing a novel, from the first marks you make on the paper, to the final draft that ends up on the bookshop shelf.

Presenter: Ian McMillan
Producer: Cecile Wright

First broadcast in June 2023.

To Odesa

5. Return

"Each remembered moment is a keyhole. Time doesn't 'flow like a river', doesn't exist in Odesa at all; the numbers of years, 1986 or 1989 or 2006 are like signs hanging about the corner grocery shop, with names of owners, swaying. In these streets, everything is ever-present. There are places like this on the planet: you can stop in the middle of the street and stick a finger into the skin of time, tear a hole, and see through."

Across a week of personal essays, the Ukrainian-American poet Ilya Kaminsky, author of Deaf Republic, writes about the city of his birth and reflects on fatherland, mother tongue, memory, Deafness, exile and oppression. He writes about the Odesa of his childhood and his family's flight from Ukraine to the USA in the early 1990s. He writes of invasion, war, regimes and revolution. Of Odesa's poets, past and present (editing their poems in the bomb shelters). Of the statues in the city squares - Leo Tolstoy, Taras Shevchenko, Catherine the Great.

In his final essay, Ilya visits the Jewish cemetery in Odesa to check on the family graves. He reflects on nation, language, home and exile. "The "New" Jewish cemetery still exists. But the "Old" one is razed. In its place stands a park surrounded by apartment buildings, some of which have walls made of brick intermingled with old Jewish tombstones. Yes, the walls of apartments are built out of my people's tombstones, and inside these buildings people watch soccer battles on TV and drink beer. And that is why juxtaposition, repetition, and fragmentation are my literary devices: like these walls made out of bricks and Jewish gravestones. Inside paragraphs: people shall live again, adopt foundlings, tango during the war, tell stories. I turn and toil giving many answers, but the truth is simple: I bring fragments of our past here because it is a way to read Kaddish for my people."

Ilya Kaminsky was born in Odesa, Ukraine in 1977, and arrived to the United States in 1993, when his family was granted asylum by the American government. He is the author of Deaf Republic (Graywolf Press) and Dancing In Odessa (Tupelo Press) and co-editor and co-translated many other books, including Ecco Anthology of International Poetry (Harper Collins), In the Hour of War: Poems from Ukraine (Arrowsmith), and Dark Elderberry Branch: Poems of Marina Tsvetaeva (Alice James Books). He currently teaches in Princeton and lives in New Jersey.

Sonic dust, musical gardens and digital birds

Settle in for another Friday night exploration into mind-bending sounds with Verity Sharp. We'll head to a musical garden conjured by Virginia guitarist Daniel Bachman, courtesy of an album he recorded whilst working as a carpenter's assistant in a cabin near Shenandoah National Park (during which time he repurposed and built his own instruments including an old Hondo banjo and an Appalachian mouth harp.) There'll be a stop-off in Kampala for the pulsing percussive sounds of Ugandan techno collective Nihiloxica, and a visit, too, to the sound sculptures of Italian artist Fabio Perletta. Plus the Australian field recordist Kate Carr invites us to reimagine birdsong through her electronic manipulations, with what she calls "a field guide to phantasmic birds."
