Haydn's Symphony No 100 in G Major 'Military' in Building a Library with Simon Heighes and Andrew McGregor

Andrew McGregor with the best new recordings of classical music.

9.30 am

Collaborative pianist and music director, Allyson Devenish brings an exciting pile of new releases to the studio and shares her On Repeat track: music she has been listening to again and again.

10.30 am

Building a Library

Simon Heighes chooses his favourite recording of Haydn's Symphony No 100 in G Major 'Military'.

Haydn's Military Symphony is the eighth of his twelve London symphonies and was completed in 1794. The nickname "Military" comes from the second movement (and the end of the finale), which features prominent trumpet fanfares with percussion effects. One contemporary wrote after the first performance that the second movement evoked the "hellish roar of war increasing to a climax of horrid sublimity!"

11.20 am

Record of the Week: Andrew's top pick.

SAT 11:45 Music Matters (m001wqxl)

Joyce DiDonato, Caroline Potter on Boulez, Szymanowski's Harnasie

Presented by Tom Service.

This week, Tom talks to the American mezzo-soprano Joyce DiDonato about her life in music, and her creative mission to challenge the status quo. From her work in refugee camps, to her long relationship with the maximum security prison SingSing in New York State, as well as in concert halls and opera stages, DiDonato confounds expectations of an international classical artist. She talks about the joy of engaging differently with young audiences, and of recording and touring projects like Eden, which makes real connections with the natural world and includes the publishing of new music for anyone to sing.

Conductor Edward Gardner and artist Ben Cullen Williams talk about their reimagining of Szymanowski's ballet Harnasie: a story of love, bandits, and how the robbers of the Tatras mountains in Poland win out over the civilisation below. Also featuring filmed choreography by Wayne MacGregor, the production has received its premiere in Katowice and comes to London this month, and uses human and digital intelligence to form a kinetic, sculptural video installation opening a portal to new worlds of dance.

And Caroline Potter reveals the mission behind her new book, 'Pierre Boulez: Organised Delirium', which aims to change perceptions about the French composer. A leading figure of the musical avant-garde in the mid-20th century, Boulez is known for the mathematical and structural elements of his music, but Caroline Potter places just as much importance on the influences in his early career from the worlds of literature, magic, surrealism and the music of other cultures.

SAT 15:00 Sound of Gaming (m001q144)
Resurrection

The concept of resurrection is central to the way many games work and enables you to learn. Through titles such as Life is Strange (Jonathan Morali), The Sims (Ian Eshkeri) and Dark Souls III (Yuka Kitamura), Elle Osili-Wood takes a look at how the idea of death and rebirth inhabits the gaming world. Video games are almost uniquely placed to explore questions like would you still be the same person if you could undo your biggest regret? And, if you could copy yourself, which would be the real you?

Her guest is the award-winning composer Erik Desiderio who talks about playing ancient Norse instruments on his soundtrack for Last Epoch, the excitement of scoring for Star Trek Fleet Command and the surge in popularity of video game music concerts.

Also in the programme, live music from the Zoe Rahman Quintet, recorded on the J to Z Presents stage at this year's London Jazz Festival. Together they recreate the warm tones and striking textures of Zoe's latest album, Colour of Sound.

SAT 18:30 Opera on 3 (m001wrb2)
Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande

In a forest in the vaguely medieval kingdom of Allemonde, Prince Golaud finds a mysterious young woman weeping by a fountain. They are soon married but six months later, apart from finding out her name, Golaud knows little more about Mélisande than at their first meeting. When she meets Golaud's half-brother Pelléas they fall in love and the tragic end of the story is inexorably set.

The huge dramatic and psychological power of Pelléas et Mélisande hangs on Debussy's extraordinary and subtle score where minutely calculated effects, especially near-silence and flickering half-lights, so often hover on the threshold of hearing. Debussy himself described it as 'a means of expression that seems to me quite special' – a judgement vindicated by history and many of the 20th century's foremost composers and musicians.

Iván Fischer was both conductor and director of this critically acclaimed production, its outstanding cast led by Bernard Richter and Patricia Petibon in the title roles. Like his Budapest Festival Orchestra, Fischer wore a cloak of leaves, all of them immersed in the action, the stage a forest with singers, players and conductor among the trees.

Recorded at the Béla Bartók National Concert Hall, Budapest, last September and introduced by Kate Molleson in conversation with Iván Fischer.

A resonant and haunting music-drama by one of the 21st century's most original creative minds.

Isabelle Eberhardt (1877–1904) was an explorer, nomad, journalist, novelist, passionate romantic, Sufi, and one of the most unique and unusual women of her era. Missy Mazzoli's chamber opera evokes her short, untrammelled life in words and music of uncompromising beauty and imagination.

Bursts of Light

Corey Mwamba presents improvised music teeming with light and birdsong. For Dawn Chorus Day, falling this weekend, a dazzling piece from Sarah Peebles playing the shō: gentle wind work breezes through collected recordings of birdsong, rushing rivers and the soft hush of rustling plants. Plus, Wadada Leo Smith plays with a new ensemble, Orange Wave Electric, the band's name reflecting the electric vitality Smith sees in this particular colour. The group comprises stalwart figures in experimental music including Nels Cline, Brandon Ross, Bill Laswell and Melvin Gibbs, and through anthemic rock grooves and soaring trumpet lines, the group references Black cultural figures as a way of pointing to the creative possibilities of social transformation.

Elsewhere in the show, experimental artists Halina Rahdjian and Luhas create a dense world of sensory wonder, with dappled light creeping through in the form of glitching tape manipulations, Nintendo sound effects, and field recordings.

Empowered Women

As part of Radio 3's programming for International Women's Day, Lucie Skeaping chats to Clare Norburn, director of the group The Telling. These musical storytellers celebrate their 15th anniversary in 2024, and there's a particular focus on their recent projects celebrating three astounding musical women.

This first is the medieval German nun, mystic and composer Hildegard of Bingen.

Then, there's Beatriz de Dia - a female troubadour, whose melodies and lyrics in the Occitan language have come down to us from 13th Century France.

And finally, there's an imagined Jewish woman on her final night in Seville as the Spanish Reconquista looms over the Kingdom of Al-Andalus. She is being forced to leave Spain and set sail for an uncertain future. Her story echoes down the ages to the personal stories of people affected by politics and war today. She tunes into the voices of a community of Jewish, Christian and Muslim women from across the Spanish peninsula.

Impassioned argument: Elizabeth Maconchy's string quartets

"For me, the best music is an impassioned argument". So said one of Britain's greatest 20th-century composers, Elizabeth Maconchy.

Who?? Despite her many awards and medals - including a damehood in 1987 - and a lifetime spent promoting new music, Elizabeth's work slipped out of fashion and out of view in the latter part of her remarkable career. With concertos and symphonies, vocal music, chamber works, five operas, an operetta and three ballets to her name, Elizabeth's voice is that of economy, elegance and rich expression. And it is in her century-spanning 13 string quartets that her development - and musical outlook - as an artist are most closely expressed.

With a cultural resurgence in all things mid-century, Tom Service chats to Janell Yeo of the Bloomsbury Quartet and considers whether the time is now ripe for a reclamation of Elizabeth's place at our musical top table.

A Woman's Lot

"If we escape a little from the common sitting-room and see human beings not always in their relation to each other but in relation to reality". In Virginia Woolf's A Room of One's Own, the author summons up the image of Shakespeare's sister seizing her opportunities. Today's Words and Music looks forward to International Women's Day on March 8th with writers and musicians challenging society's rules. Jessica Mitford's Hons and Rebels takes us to the Spanish Civil War, Sally Rooney and Aphra Behn imagine adulterous relationships, Warsan Shire writes in praise of Grace Jones, and Athena steps into her chariot of fire in Emily Wilson's new translation of The Iliad. Music includes compositions by Emily Hall, Clara Schumann, Fatoumata Diawara, Cecilia McDowall and Hildegard of Bingen, and pieces arranged or conducted by women including Alison Balsom, Rachel Podger, Barbara Hannigan and Emmanuelle Haïm. The readers are Greta Scacchi and Lydia Wilson.
On March 8th Radio 3 has a special focus on women composing and performing.

Bath Time

The Rituals and rites of Roman bathing are usually associated, as they are today, with luxury, but the recent discovery of a bath house in Carlisle, at the western end of Hadrian's Wall and so at the very edge of the Empire, is the catalyst for New Generation Thinker and Historian Eleanor Rosamund Barraclough to explore the domestic realities of Roman Bathing. Along with Archaeologist Frank Geicco and Professor Elizabeth Archibald, Eleanor discusses bathing rituals and how much difference there was between the luxuries available in Rome and the substantial building being rediscovered at the edge of Carlisle Cricket club. And if baths were of such singular importance to the occupiers, what happened when they left? Eleanor and her guests discuss the myth that baths and bathing simply vanished throughout the so-called Dark ages, and they wonder whether the treatment of the human body doesn't link us to our ancient ancestors just as readily as the food they ate and the literature and music they enjoyed.

The sounds of the BBC's Wild Isles

This Slow Radio experience features sounds from the BBC television programme Wild Isles: a chance to revel in the extraordinary sounds recorded and created for the series, without voiceover or music.

Using an aural collage of clips, the half hour soundscape takes a journey from mountain stream to the sea, around Great Britain and Ireland. It utilises sounds from the Freshwater and Oceans episodes and begins with a specially recorded introduction by Sir David Attenborough.

From there the sounds of cascading streams and waterfalls give way to the call and shuffle of a common toad. Around the caves of County Cavan bats use sonar to navigate. Their ultrasonic clicks can be heard, slowed down. A cuckoo sings beside a chalk stream while a spider catches a pond skater in its web.

The distinctive low call of the bittern introduces the Suffolk reed beds, where great crested grebes perform a mating dance, beaks clashing. Further towards the sea, a colony of knot are scattered by a peregrine falcon, and in the Shetland Isles, a sea otter grunts and snorts around the rocks.

A thunderstorm at sea heralds a seal colony at Blakeney Point, Norfolk, where two males fight. Then the eerie calls of Manx shearwater, who visit each year from South America, are followed by the chatter of many gannets, in and out of water.

The Corryvreckan Whirlpool in Scotland pulls us under for an array of fantastical subaquatic sounds: cuttlefish, sea gooseberries, melon comb jelly; the squelch of a royal flush sea slug, spider crabs leaving their shells, and the scream of a scallop, devoured by a starfish. Dolphins break the surface, and a bluefin tuna skims across the waves before we sail out into Cardigan Bay.

Johanna Senfter (1879-1961)

The Senfter Millions

Kate Molleson and Natasha Loges explore Johanna Senfter's early life as a member of a very prosperous family in provincial Germany.

If you know the name Johanna Senfter, it is probably in connection with her teacher, the composer, Max Reger. Senfter won the Arthur Nikisch prize for composition in 1910, and went on to be one of the most prolific of all late-Romantic female composers, writing at least 150 works, yet she has all but disappeared from our history books. In between the two World Wars she was very active within the world of music too, founding the Oppenheim Music Society, organising her own concert series and founding the Oppenheim Bach Society. However, her personal life is shrouded in mystery with little information published about either her biography, or her music, and there are substantial gaps in her story when we know nothing about Senfter. Unsurprisingly then, there are also questions hanging over certain elements of her personal life, and her political allegiances. Over the course of this week, Kate Molleson is joined by Professor Natasha Loges to explore the life of Johanna Senfter. They also examine the tumultuous world of early 20th-century Germany in which Senfter was working, and speculate on the reasons for her anonymity today.

In Monday's episode, Kate and Natasha explore Johanna Senfter's early life as a member of a very prosperous family in provincial Germany. The family's financial position earned them the nickname 'Senfter Millions'.

Edith Piaf in Five Songs

1. Milord

Edith Piaf - from her mouth to your heart. The Essay explores her life and work through five songs.

1: Milord by Lucy O'Meara.

She rose from utter poverty to international stardom but never truly left the streets behind both in her stage persona & in reality. Her realm was the chanson realiste-songs that evoked the lower depths and delighted the adoring bourgeois audiences. 'A song is a story but the audience must be able to believe it. I'm the lover, my song must be sad, it must be a cry from the heat, it's my life' said Piaf. Milord was composed in 1959 by Marguerite Monnot with lyrics by Piaf's then current lover Georges Moustaki. It dwells in the shadows of the street and a dialogue between high and low. Toff and a girl from the rough side of town.

Johanna Senfter (1879-1961)

Finding a champion

Kate Molleson and Natasha Loges explore Johanna Senfter's years of study with Max Reger in Leipzig.

If you know the name Johanna Senfter, it is probably in connection with her teacher, the composer, Max Reger. Senfter won the Arthur Nikisch prize for composition in 1910, and went on to be one of the most prolific of all late-Romantic female composers, writing at least 150 works, yet she has all but disappeared from our history books. In between the two World Wars she was very active within the world of music too, founding the Oppenheim Music Society, organising her own concert series and founding the Oppenheim Bach Society. However, her personal life is shrouded in mystery with little information published about either her biography, or her music, and there are substantial gaps in her story when we know nothing about Senfter. Unsurprisingly then, there are also questions hanging over certain elements of her personal life, and her political allegiances. Over the course of this week, Kate Molleson is joined by Professor Natasha Loges to explore the life of Johanna Senfter. They also examine the tumultuous world of early 20th-century Germany in which Senfter was working, and speculate on the reasons for her anonymity today.

In Tuesday's episode, Kate and Natasha explore Johanna Senfter's years of study with the composer Max Reger in Leipzig. The pair would become good friends, and Reger would prove to be a champion of Senfter's burgeoning talent, and early music. Kate and Natasha also discover how a tragic loss for the composer at this time in her life may actually have helped Senfter on her journey to become a composer.

The Hallé plays Bruckner

Sir Mark Elder explores Bruckner's 'greatest symphony', the Eighth, for the very first time - from Bridgewater Hall, Manchester.

Bruckner's deeply held religious faith motivated his music and it's been aptly said that he glorified God through his symphonies. He laboured over his Eighth for 16 years and, after its premiere, the composer Hugo Wolf declared that it was 'the work of a giant'. At its core is the sublime slow movement where Bruckner included the rich sonorities of Wagner tubas. But no less astonishing is the ending of this seventy minute work where Bruckner brings together themes from all the movements in a moment once described as one of 'blazing calm, an act of emphatic consolation.' As a prelude to this epic symphony, the Hallé Youth Choir sings Bruckner's short motet, Os justi: 'The mouth of the righteous utters wisdom, and his tongue speaks what is just. The law of his God is in his heart, and his feet do not falter. Alleluia.'

Presented by Tom McKinney and recorded at Bridgewater Hall, Manchester on 29 Feb.

Edith Piaf in Five Songs

2. L'Accordeoniste

Edith Piaf, from her mouth to your heart. From the lower depths of utter poverty to the very heights of international stardom. Her life and work explored in five songs.

2-L'Accordeoniste.

1940-Paris, the Germans wore grey, Piaf wore black as the City of Light was conquered and occupied. Like so many artists she sang throughout the war as the 'crow on pedals' - the Swastika - adorned streets and was stamped on all official documents. 'We felt nothing was permanent, that we were merely living day to day. Laughter was the only cover-up.' wrote Piaf's half sister and intimate Simone Berteaute. L'Accordeoniste was written in 1940 by Michel Emer. Legend has it that he appeared at Piaf's window in army uniform with the song, a deserter from the French army. Piaf would pay for his passage into Vichy, his true Jewish identity putting him at risk. But before he fled he offered her this song. Classic Piaf. A tale of a prostitute dreaming of being reunited with her absent accordionist lover sent off to war. It would become her first million-seller and she would perform it for 20 years.

Edith Piaf in Five Songs

3. Les Amants d'un jour

Edith Piaf could conjure worlds wreathed in smoke and fate with her chanson realistes. A suicide pact in a dingy hotel room by doomed lovers -that's quintessential Piaf. Muriel Zagha dissects the fated melodrama of Piaf's 1956 classic and its intimate economy of means. In her plain black dress, her white face like a ghost, Piaf looks frail. In four years she will be dead. She announces the song, walks offstage, returning with a white dishcloth and a wine glass, as she starts to sing she begins to polish, mechanically. Like someone in a trance. Such is her psychic, mesmeric power.

Johanna Senfter (1879-1961)

Productivity

Johanna Senfter emerges from her self-imposed exile from public life, and it proves to be the most productive period of her entire career.

If you know the name Johanna Senfter, it is probably in connection with her teacher, the composer, Max Reger. Senfter won the Arthur Nikisch prize for composition in 1910, and went on to be one of the most prolific of all late-Romantic female composers, writing at least 150 works, yet she has all but disappeared from our history books. In between the two World Wars she was very active within the world of music too, founding the Oppenheim Music Society, organising her own concert series and founding the Oppenheim Bach Society. However, her personal life is shrouded in mystery with little information published about either her biography, or her music, and there are substantial gaps in her story when we know nothing about Senfter. Unsurprisingly then, there are also questions hanging over certain elements of her personal life, and her political allegiances. Over the course of this week, Kate Molleson is joined by Professor Natasha Loges to explore the life of Johanna Senfter. They also examine the tumultuous world of early 20th-century Germany in which Senfter was working, and speculate on the reasons for her anonymity today.

In Thursday's episode, Kate and Natasha explore the circumstances which led to Johanna Senfter emerging from her self-imposed exile from public life, to become a pivotal figure in the reviving of musical life in post World War I provincial Germany. It also proved to be, probably, the most productive period of Senfter's life, both in terms of performances of her works across Germany and further afield and in terms of composition of new music.

Gemma New conducts the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra in a concert of rich colours and luminous emotions. When Brahms wrote his final symphony he reached back across the centuries to find courage and strength as he strode forward into the storm. It's as moving as it is powerful. In jazz-age America, Samuel Barber reinvented the romantic violin concerto with streamlined melodies and all-American verve. And Sarah Gibson takes handloom weaving as her inspiration in 'warp & weft', a vibrant, evocative modern celebration of female creativity.

Edith Piaf in Five Songs

4. Hymne à l'amour

The life and art of Edith Piaf in five songs. The greatest love of Piaf's life was France's greatest boxer, Marcel Cerdan. They longed for each other, despite his family life. He was due to visit her by ship but such was their amour that he changed his plans and boarded Air France Flight 009 from New York on October 28 1949. The resulting plane crash left no survivors. Piaf recorded the song on May 2 1950. The music was by her regular contributor Marguerite Monnot but the lyrics were here own. A howl of love and loss. The song was subsequently covered by Eddie Constantine, Cyndi Lauper and numerous Japanese artists. The French Canadian singer and band leader Myriam Phyro has long been under the spell of Piaf. Here she explores performance, art and life in this song of love and loss.

In Friday's episode, Kate and Natasha discuss the serious effects on musical life in Germany caused by the run-up to the Second World War, and explore Johanna Senfter's second retreat from the public and the bitterness that she felt towards the end of her life due to her music's reception. Kate and Natasha also address the accusations which were made about the seemingly apolitical Senfter's music by the German Communist party and the impact of those on performances of Senfter's works.

FRI 22:00 The Verb (m001rj9v)

On International Women's Day, Ian McMillan is joined by poets Joelle Taylor, Rommi Smith, Kim Moore and Shirley May to explore how women poets are using poetry and writing to explore and challenge sexism and to empower women through words. There's also music from soul singer, Sarah-Jane Morris, and musician, Tony Remy, from their new album 'Sisterhood'.

Rommi Smith reads a poem specially written for The Verb celebrating the colour purple; in 'The Night Alphabet', Joelle Taylor's first novel, each one of a woman's tattoos is a portal to a story of repression and women's resistance, violence and justice; Kim Moore's poetry explores and exposes everyday sexism, gender, class and also performance as a female poet; Shirley May writes from the perspective of the Caribbean diaspora and reflects on stories of the women who came before her, and the young women poets finding their voices now.

FRI 22:45 The Essay (m001wqz6)
Edith Piaf in Five Songs

5. Non, je ne regrette rien

Non, je ne regrette rien wasn't even meant for Edith Piaf and she almost refused it. Yet it has come to define her, just like My Way did for Sinatra. By 1960 Piaf was crippled by rheumatism, buoyed by painkillers and alcohol and had seen off obituarists after falling into a coma. Doctors warned her that taking to the stage would kill her. An inauspicious context for songwriter Charles Dumont to hit her up with a new ballad. Actually an old ballad, written in 1956 for Rosalie Dubois. But with a change in title, Dumont thought the song the perfect vehicle for Piaf's soulful destruction and defiance. When he finally turned up at her apartment she thought he looked like a civil servant, barely daring to look at her. Dumont was sweating profusely. Things were looking pretty grim but then he started to play...

Elizabeth Alker celebrates the song that has come to define Piaf ever more.

FRI 23:00 Late Junction (m001nh7t)
Agathe Max and Enji in session

Bringing home Radio 3's International Women's Day celebrations, Verity Sharp presents the fruits of our latest exclusive collaboration session, improvised in a studio over the course of just a few hours. The Late Junction sessions are a chance for two artists who have never worked together before to create new spontaneous music with each other. For this episode, we invited Mongolian vocalist Enji to work with French violinist Agathe Max.

Ulaanbaatar-born and Munich-based singer and songwriter Enkhjargal Erkhembayar, known as Enji, blends smooth jazz textures with traditional Mongolian music. A vocalist, bandleader and storyteller, Enji was raised instilled with a love for folk and "urtiin duu", a form of long song she learned from her father's side of the family in the countryside. Her latest album Ulaan is a musical exploration of "personal stories and unbearable distances", and takes its title from her family's childhood nickname for her.

Agathe Max is a violinist, viola player and composer, originally from Lyon in France, and now a well-established part of London's improvising and experimental music scenes. Trained in classical music and electro acoustic composition, Agathe creates soundscapes with her instruments incorporating effects, loops and field recordings. Her latest work SHADOWW is a meditation on shadow work, a practice of psychological therapy which aims to make open what is hidden in the unconscious. She's a keen collaborator, working with the likes of Valentina Magaletti, Natalia Beylis and Charles Hayward, with improvisation being her favourite form of creation: "It's a very special dialogue, you never know in advance where it is going to take you!"

Elsewhere, Verity plays a whole host of exciting new releases, including lava-inspired drones from Melbourne trio Panghalina, obsessive avant-garde spoken word from Montreal-based Swedish vocalist and composer Erika Angell, and thirteen ways of looking at a blackbird from Cork multi-instrumentalist Roslyn Steer.
