Violinist Nemanja Radulovic

Tom Service talks to violinist Nemanja Radulovic and plays the best classical music from classic to new recordings. Plus, as Germany marks 35 years since the fall of the Berlin Wall, Tom looks at the state of music there, talking to the conductor Christian Thielemann.

10.10am

The star violinist Nemanja Radulovic talks to Tom about his love of the Khachaturian Violin Concerto and what he takes from the Russian schools of violin playing and his formative years at the Paris Conservatoire, after uprooting with his family from his homeland in Serbia. He imaginatively fuses the masterpieces of the violin repertoire from Bach to Tchaikovsky with his fascination for folk music, everywhere from the Balkans to Scotland.

11.35am

On this day exactly 35 years since the fall of the Berlin Wall, Tom talks to the conductor Christian Thielemann, who grew up in what was West Berlin. He talks about what life was like then, and his memories of a divided Germany. Thielemann has a unique perspective having been Music Director of both the Deutsche Oper in former West Berlin and now the Staatsoper in what was East Berlin. With the Reichstag in the news this week, and the threat of 10% cuts to arts funding in Berlin, Tom also talks to Christian Thielemann about life in unified Berlin now and his hopes for the future.

SAT 12:00 Earlier... with Jools Holland (m0024p7r)

Jools's musical selection for a Saturday lunchtime

In a new show for Saturday lunchtimes, Jools shares his lifelong passion for classical music, and the beautiful connections with jazz and blues. With fascinating guests each week, who bring their own favourite music and occasionally perform live in Jools's studio.

Today, Jools's choices include music by Jean Sibelius, Amy Beach and Arvo Part, with performances from the Attacca Quartet and Sister Rosetta Tharpe. Jools's guest is pianist and composer Neil Cowley who discusses his journey through music, reuniting with his trio, and his gig at this year's EFG London Jazz Festival. He introduces music he loves by Mozart, Shostakovich and John Barry.

A View From The Organ Loft

4. Boardwalk Hall, Atlantic City

Anna is in Atlantic City, New Jersey, to visit the Boardwalk Hall organ, which holds multiple world records. Anna demonstrates how much slower she has to play a piece to make it audible in such an enormous space, and shares some of the few recordings that have been made on that instrument. She also finds that there is more to Atlantic City than its organ with 1,235 stop tabs. She explores a barbershop quartet that takes you back in time to the area's days as a holiday resort, and discovers recordings by musicians based in and around New Jersey including composer Betty Jackson King and the Attacca Quartet. We also hear from Nathan Bryson, Curator of Organs at Boardwalk Hall, about the second, smaller organ lurking in the same hall.

Plus, an exclusive version of Widor's Toccata for spontaneous organ duet where Anna is joined by 9-year-old Nykoda...

Building a Library

Verdi's Il trovatore with Roger Parker

Written hot on the heels of Rigoletto, and premiered just two months before La traviata, Il trovatore (The Troubador) is one of Verdi's most dramatic operas, and one of his most popular successes. It is packed with great music, including the bombastic 'Anvil Chorus', Azucena's 'Stride la vampa' (The flame crackles!) and tenor Manrico's heroic 'Di quella pira' (The flames of the pyre). The story, based on a play by Antonio García Gutiérrez, has been described as "a high flown, sprawling melodrama, packed with all manner of fantastic and bizarre incident."

 Kimberly Prescott (director)
 Carolyn Kuan (conductor)

A smash-hit Broadway play turned movie, David Henry Hwang's M. Butterfly metamorphoses into music theatre as the UK premiere of Huang Ruo's operatic reworking takes wing.

Love, betrayal, self-deception. The themes of M. Butterfly intertwine with those of Puccini's achingly tragic opera; but here they're ingeniously upended as the action is relocated to Paris and Mao's China. Nothing is quite what it seems. Stereotypes are challenged, power struggles realigned.

This production contains graphic language, and a depiction of self-harm.

Synopsis

Act 1

Paris, 1986. Partygoers mock the diplomat René Gallimard for his affair with a Peking Opera soprano. From his prison cell, Gallimard begins to tell his story.

Beijing, 1964. Gallimard is assigned to the newly-established French embassy. He goes to the opera and sees an enchanting soprano in the role of Madama Butterfly. He develops the fantasy that he is Pinkerton and Song Liling is Butterfly, the "Oriental" woman in submission to the "Western devil."

Gallimard's boyhood friend Marc appears to him in a dream, congratulating him on his new love.

Gallimard visits Song at her flat. They drink tea together, but she sends him home. Her rebuff keeps him away from the opera for months. At last she writes to him, wishing to see him again.

The Ambassador, Toulon, informs Gallimard that he has been promoted to vice-consul. He goes immediately to Song's flat to tell her the news.

Act 2

Paris, 1986. Partygoers read more news about the Gallimard case.

Back in 1966, Toulon and Gallimard confer about America's plans in Asia. Meanwhile, Comrade Chin of the People's Liberation Army asks Song to serve the Revolution by passing on classified information from the French.

Gallimard is demoted because the Ambassador has lost faith in the Americans and in him. He goes to Song's flat and demands that she strip for him. Then he relents ... just in time for Song to announce to him that she is pregnant. Gallimard is aflame with joy: "I want to marry you!"

Song asks Chin to procure a male, blond mixed-race baby in seven months' time. Toulon informs Gallimard that he is being sent home. Gallimard rushes to Song's flat, intending to bring her back to France with him. The flat is deserted. An angry troupe of Revolutionary Chinese Opera performers takes the stage.

Act 3

The Revolutionary Chinese Opera company stages a ritualistic denunciation of Comrade Song, the "actor-oppressor," and recommends her rehabilitation. Chin orders her to go to Gallimard in France and send back weekly reports.

Gallimard, haggard, recalls his return to France ten years prior. Lonely, deflated and always haunted by Song's memory, he would tell his story to anyone who would listen-but no one did. Suddenly Song appears. Gallimard is transported by the reunion. Then two French counterintelligence agents come to arrest him on charges of espionage, claiming they have already extracted a confession from Monsieur Song. Before the audience's eyes, Song is transformed from a woman in Chinese dress to a man in an Armani suit.

Song testifies in court. The judge asks whether Gallimard knew Song was a man. "You know, Your Honor," Song replies, "I never asked."

Song and Gallimard are left alone in a room in a prison. Song begins to strip. He will show René the truth. Gallimard protests that he only loved the lie. Declaring that he'd rather live in pure imagination, he sends Song away.

Dancers join Gallimard onstage and help him dress in kimono, wig and makeup. He is the Butterfly now.

Occitan polyphony with Barrut

Lopa Kothari presents extracts from a special live performance by the polyphonic singing group Barrut, recorded last month at WOMEX 24 in Manchester. Barrut, seven singers and a percussionist from Southern France, use their voices to tell stories of resistance and humanity, singing in Occitan, also known as lenga d'òc. Elsewhere in the show, we hear music from the Malian griot couple Amy Sacko and husband Bassekou Kouyate, as well as a track from a new compilation of marimba-based music from the Esmeraldas province of Ecuador. Recorded outdoors, the release offers up unique melodies and rhythmic patterns rooted in the Afro-Ecuadorian folklore.

DING, DONG, DARLING! - joy reclaimed!

Tom Service presents the latest new music in performance including premieres from the recent Donaueschinger and Nordic Music Days. From Donaueschinger comes Franck Bedrossian's Feu sur moi for 24-part choir and electronics, a hair-raising descent into Hell to a text by Arthur Rimbaud. Also from this major German festival, we have Sara Glojnaric's glitteringly subversive DING, DONG, DARLING! for orchestra and fixed media, "A piece about queer joy. ... about chasing that moment of joy, hope, and a sense of lightness triggered by another person's display of unabashed queer joy ... It challenges the dominant narrative that being queer is exclusively rooted in pain or trauma and instead recognizes the resilience, resistance, and creativity of LGBTQ+ people.... it's a work filled with references and memories, embracing non normativity, pathos, hyper-pop, camp, glitter, youth, and sexuality in all its aspects and, most importantly, reclaiming joy as an integral part of my artistic practice".

And, from Glasgow's Nordic Music Days, the Chaos Quartet plays Leevi Räsänen's 'the two childhoods.' A work which emerges from the Finnish composer's "Personal need to heal: "Those who have experienced school violence know the profound and long-term consequences of when just simple words become weapons. Having thought for a long time, that the bullying I experienced during my childhood would've made me stronger ... I realized that I had survived it by repressing almost all memories altogether. This piece aims to address that memory-mush ... "

And, in a show packed with thoroughbreds, comes Thomas van Dun's Rocailles de l'après vie..., the work which won the prestigious International Rostrum of Composers prize for composers under 30 in the Netherlands. The rocailles referring to those ornamental flourishes and flurries that define the gorgeous excesses of rococo churches. "The purpose of these visual stimuli is to delight people", Thomas says: "In Rocailles de l'après-vie... these become intertwined flutters and runs...Everything moves and through this overstimulation I want to put the listener in a state of trance."

Dame Maggie Aderin-Pocock

Dame Maggie Aderin-Pocock readily admits that her childhood television viewing played a vital role in her eventual choice of career: she loved Star Trek and The Clangers - the animated children's show featuring little whistling mice living on a moon-like planet. Along with coverage of the Apollo missions, they helped to inspire a journey which led her to become one of the UK's leading space experts. She's also a passionate science communicator, and a familiar face on our screens, as co-presenter of The Sky at Night.

Maggie is an authority on telescopes and space imaging, and was part of the James Webb Space Telescope team, launched by NASA in 2021. This telescope used ground-breaking technology to produce strikingly clear pictures of stars we've never seen before, changing how we understand the universe.

Her musical passions include works by Bach, Dvorak and Purcell, as well as music inspired by the moon and by distant planets.

Hannah French introduces choral music by the Spanish Renaissance composer Cristóbal de Morales, performed at the 2024 Utrecht Early Music Festival.

This year's Festival focussed on composers working in Seville in the sixteenth century such as Morales, Guerrero and Peñalosa. But with its port as a centre for global trade, many composers from other countries around the world passed through and left their mark on the musical sound of the Andalusian city at the time. Morales was born in Seville in about 1500, and became known as the 'emperor of Iberian polyphony', demonstrated in performances of his music by Cantica Symphonia and Cantar Lontano, and closing with Morales's Mass for the Dead performed by Vox Luminis.

Milton's world

John Milton died three hundred and fifty years ago, on the 8th November 1674. In this edition of Words and Music we take a journey through the work of this man, considered one of the greatest poets in the English language. He certainly doesn't shy away from the big themes. From Paradise Lost, we hear Satan, the fallen angel, reconciling himself to evil, join God on creation of the First Day, as well as Eve weighing up whether to share the forbidden fruit of the Tree of Knowledge with her beloved Adam. Beyond Paradise Lost, we hear Samson lamenting his blindness, the evil Comus attempting to seduce an innocent virgin, and meditations on both time and music that point beyond human life to divine salvation. Milton's father was a musician, so we'll hear a combination of work he would have heard himself, as well as music inspired by Milton's verse by Handel and others, and work from the likes of Bach, Mozart and Beethoven that aspires to the lofty themes of the poetry itself.

The Ballad of The Hackney Mole Man

"I'm just a man who loves to dig", said William Lyttle, an Irish civil engineer who died in 2010 but who burrowed such an extensive network of tunnels beneath his home in north London that he became known as The Mole Man of Hackney.

Unlike the billionaires who build vast basements beneath their mansions, William Lyttle dug purely for pleasure. "There is great beauty in inventing things that serve no purpose," he said.

This is the story of a life's work: a grand solo project undertaken over 40 years, slowly, secretly. It's a tale of dirt, darkness and escape, of finding your own space and making your own way as an immigrant in a new country. And it's the story of how one man's obsession impacted the people around him.

We hear from former neighbours Nick and Sue Bunker, writer Iain Sinclair and artists Karen Russo and Tom Hunter who met Mr Lyttle.

'The Ballad of the Hackney Mole Man' features the song 'Down I Go Again' specially composed for the programme by Ríoghnach Connolly and performed by Ríoghnach with Ellis Davies on guitar. Engineered and mixed by Biff Roxby.

Inspaces and Atmospheres

Join Elizabeth Alker with a selection of fresh music from genre-defying artists as we journey through landscapes of ambient and experimental sounds. Along the way, we'll hear from emerging independent producers whose work plays with orchestral textures and classical form as well as the latest sounds from a new generation of contemporary composers whose sound is infused with the spirit of rock, pop and electronica.

This week, we hear from alt-folk artist Richard Dawson with his ode to allotment life, a new collaboration involving Carlos Nino, Surya Botofasina and Nate Mercereau - and also music from Mermaid Chunky's brilliantly titled album 'slif, slaf, slof'.

Elizabeth also plays a track from a compilation celebrating the work of pioneering composer Norman McLaren, creator of landmark short films like Dots and Synchrony and the founder of the influential animation studio at the National Film Board of Canada.

MON 16:00 Composer of the Week (m0024m2x)

Bud Powell (1924-1966)

The Amazing Bud Powell

This week Kate Molleson explores the life and work of a jazz giant in his centenary year: the amazing Bud Powell, in the company of Powell's biographer Peter Pullman. Focusing on Bud Powell as a performer, prioritising his own compositions but also appreciating the art of improvisation as spontaneous composition.

Bud Powell was born in 1924 and grew up in Harlem, against the backdrop of the Harlem Renaissance. He was a gifted pianist from a young age and became a pioneer of bebop. But he was a troubled soul and the great paradox of Bud Powell is how there could be such joy and expression in his music while his life was so painful.

Today Kate Molleson and Peter Pullman look at Powell's early years in the creative crucible of Harlem 1920s and 30s, his first recordings with the Cootie Williams band and a violent arrest in 1945 that would have long-lasting consequences.

Peter Pullman's deeply researched biography of Bud Powell is called Wail: the Life of Bud Powell.

MON 19:30 Radio 3 in Concert (m0024m3c)

BBC Philharmonic Orchestra - Schumann's Rhenish Symphony

From the Bridgewater Hall, Manchester

Presented by Tom McKinney

The Orchestra, with Chief Conductor John Storgårds, welcome legendary pianist Garrick Ohlsson for Brahms's First Piano Concerto. Brahms had a close relationship with the Schumanns and they encouraged him to experiment with writing for orchestra. Robert's illness, attempted suicide, and later death formed a back-drop as this Concerto was composed, and Brahms's feelings for his friend are heard in the opening movement which is by turns stormy and touchingly tender. The middle movement is headed with a quotation from the Mass, 'Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini' (Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord), mirrored by a hymn-like opening; it is tempting to think of this as a tribute to Robert Schumann. The contrast with the Finale is dramatic; rustic dance and optimism bring the all-embracing journey of this piece to its hard won triumphant close.

Robert Schumann's infectious and life-affirming 'Rhenish' Symphony stars before the interval. A visit to the Rhineland and Cologne Cathedral inspired the piece and the presence of the different characters of the river are embedded in the music. The Cathedral's dark interior inspires a chorale-like fourth movement, before he steps out into the light again as the music comes to its colourful, energetic and optimistic end.

The concert opens with the Overture to Weber's last opera, 'Oberon'. Premiered in London a few weeks before his death, this music is the last by a composer whose lifetime reflecting drama in music lit the path to Romanticism.

MON 21:45 The Essay (m001jtt4)

Lundy, Fastnet, Irish Sea: Wales and its Coastal Waters

Out to Open Water

In this series of Essays writer Jon Gower explores the patches of sea water around Wales, sailing past Viking slave traders, soft crumbling coastlines, industrial scale smuggling, marathon chess matches between lighthouse keepers, ghost ships, whales and walrus along the way. For the country of Wales, surrounded on three sides by the sea, that sea has always been important - a trade route, a means to export ideas such as Christianity, or as a source of fish - especially herring, so many herring.

Out to Open Water - To the west of the Welsh landmass laps the Irish Sea, shaping its shores and connecting us with that place called elsewhere. It's been both a barrier and a conduit, at times separating and at other times connecting. The Irish Sea is nowadays synonymous with a hard border, but for centuries this Celtic lake has been its porous opposite. It's been a channel for the exchange of ideas, and a saintly superhighway: a place where history's tides so often change direction.

Bud Powell (1924-1966)

The Genius of Bud Powell

This week Kate Molleson explores the life and work of a jazz giant in his centenary year: the amazing Bud Powell, in the company of Powell's biographer Peter Pullman. Focusing on Bud Powell as a performer, prioritising his own compositions but also appreciating the art of improvisation as spontaneous composition.

Bud Powell was born in 1924 and grew up in Harlem, against the backdrop of the Harlem Renaissance. He was a gifted pianist from a young age and became a pioneer of bebop. But he was a troubled soul and the great paradox of Bud Powell is how there could be such joy and expression in his music while his life was so painful.

Today Kate Molleson and Peter Pullman explore the period of Powell's arrest alongside Thelonious Monk in 1951, and his subsequent psychiatric incarceration. In December 1952, the Birdland club in New York City managed to secure two days release for Powell in order for him to give concerts with his trio. They had to promise to have him back the moment he'd played his last note. He was actually escorted to the piano by hospital staff, who stood on either side of the stage for the entirety of the sets and promptly whisked him away at the end of the night. An awful image – and the start of Powell being considered incapacitated and being variously cared for, controlled and downright abused.

Peter Pullman's deeply researched biography of Bud Powell is called Wail: the Life of Bud Powell.

For the country of Wales, surrounded on three sides by the sea, that sea has always been important – a trade route, a means to export ideas such as Christianity, or as a source of fish - especially herring, so many herring.

Whipping Up a Storm - Jon charts the way the water out west is a bringer of bounteous gifts but a shipwrecker too, a creature of wild mood swings where a calm surface can summarily change as the wind gets up and erupts into a wild and avenging anger. The waves and the wind are able to lick the very land into shape, and occasionally reveal the ancient landscapes embodied in Welsh myths.

Bud Powell (1924-1966)

Bud Powell's Moods

This week Kate Molleson explores the life and work of a jazz giant in his centenary year: the amazing Bud Powell, in the company of Powell's biographer Peter Pullman. Focusing on Bud Powell as a performer, prioritising his own compositions but also appreciating the art of improvisation as spontaneous composition.

Bud Powell was born in 1924 and grew up in Harlem, against the backdrop of the Harlem Renaissance. He was a gifted pianist from a young age and became a pioneer of bebop. But he was a troubled soul and the great paradox of Bud Powell is how there could be such joy and expression in his music while his life was so painful.

Today Kate Molleson and Peter Pullman explore Bud Powell in the 1950s, a period in which, while still prolific, he was perceived to be someone in decline. It emphasises the brevity of his glory years: he was in his early 30s. During this period his friend and sometime adversary Charlie Parker died. They had been a confounding relationship. Their last appearance together had been a shambles. Powell was in a mess and kept disappearing, to the point that Parker took to the microphone and called his name plaintively: "Bud Powell. Bud Powell."

Peter Pullman's deeply researched biography of Bud Powell is called Wail: the Life of Bud Powell.

Jazz pianist Fergus McCreadie meets the Chaos Quartet

New Generation Artists at the Britten Studio in Snape: some of the most exciting talents in jazz and classical music come together in a programme celebrating life and rebirth.

The young jazz pianist Fergus McCreadie and his trio play tracks from their album Stream, which has been wowing listeners and audiences since its release earlier this year. With numbers like The Crossing, Mountain Stream, Coastline and Lochan Coire Àrdair, as one reviewer said, this is, "Awesome music that sings ebbs flows thunders falls and trickles, bringing the landscape of my mind alive like a walk in the glorious mountains of Scotland on a bright Spring day. Take it with you and celebrate life."

Also on the bill is the premiere of Fergus's Life Cycle, written especially for the dynamic Chaos Quartet from Germany, a work which should take on a special resonance amid the reed beds of the Suffolk coast. And, in this meeting of talent, before that Fergus McCreadie and the brilliant Colombian cellist Santiago Cañón-Valencia explore each other's musical worlds with pieces they've written to play together at Snape. And, before the evening is out, Fergus promises to improvise something inspired by the Suffolk landscape and open skies of Suffolk which have inspired countless musicians over the years.

Presented by Al Ryan from the Britten Studio, Snape.

WED 21:45 The Essay (m001jtjp)

Lundy, Fastnet, Irish Sea: Wales and its Coastal Waters

Putting the Whales in Wales

In this series of Essays writer Jon Gower explores the patches of sea water around Wales, sailing past Viking slave traders, soft crumbling coastlines, industrial scale smuggling, marathon chess matches between lighthouse keepers, ghost ships, whales and walruses along the way. For the country of Wales, surrounded on three sides by the sea, that sea has always been important – a trade route, a means to export ideas such as Christianity, or as a source of fish - especially herring, so many herring.

In 'Putting the Whales in Wales', Jon tells the story of the arrival of American Quaker émigrés at Milford Haven to help the port with its burgeoning position in the whaling industry. He tries to reconcile a peaceable people with the brutal slaughter of these giants of the ocean. The trade carried on into the 20th century, with some boats in the channel processing whales like floating factories. We hear the unfortunate back story of Hope, the whale that hangs in the Natural History Museum. And the epic adventure of a rogue dummy whale that defied capture during the 1954 filming of Moby Dick with Gregory Peck.

Produced by Megan Jones and Philippa Swallow.

Bud Powell in Paris

This week Kate Molleson explores the life and work of a jazz giant in his centenary year: the amazing Bud Powell, in the company of Powell's biographer Peter Pullman. Focusing on Bud Powell as a performer, prioritising his own compositions but also appreciating the art of improvisation as spontaneous composition.

But he was a troubled soul and the great paradox of Bud Powell is how there could be such joy and expression in his music while his life was so painful.

Today Kate Molleson and Peter Pullman follow Bud Powell to Paris where he and his partner Althea Edwards moved in 1959. We can catch a glimpse of him in this period in films. One of them a vibrant performance with Charles Mingus; another an objectifying art film made by Danish fans; a third came decades later, with the fictionalised movie Round Midnight, in which the Powell character was played by his old friend Dexter Gordon. Powell had gone to Paris in search of a fresh start and regular work. For a time he found both with a steady gig at the Blue Note Café in Paris and as part of a trio that went under the name the Three Bosses. Any steadiness in his life was, however, doomed to be temporary.

Peter Pullman's deeply researched biography of Bud Powell is called Wail: the Life of Bud Powell.

Sir Mark Elder conducts the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra in a live concert from City Halls, Glasgow.

From the very first performance, Scènes historiques II was praised for its "wonderful richness of colour", as Sibelius crafted a vivid work inspired by European history that is distinctively different from his first suite of the same name. The BBC SSO are joined by pianist, Tom Borrow, for Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 2 which, having been destroyed in its original form, was reconstructed by the composer some 10 years later with extensive revisions that expanded the scope and ambition of the piece. Then, after the interval, Sir Mark Elder guides us through a wonderfully sumptuous selection from Tchaikovsky's greatest ballet score, The Sleeping Beauty.

What Has the Sea Become

In this series of Essays writer Jon Gower explores the patches of sea water around Wales, sailing past Viking slave traders, soft crumbling coastlines, industrial scale smuggling, marathon chess matches between lighthouse keepers, ghost ships, whales and walrus along the way. For the country of Wales, surrounded on three sides by the sea, that sea has always been important - a trade route, a means to export ideas such as Christianity, or as a source of fish - especially herring, so many herring.

What Has the Sea Become - tells of the great fortune the herring trade brought Wales over the years, from coastal towns whose very names boast of the fish in their waters, to the priests squabbling over beaches to ensure they got their tithe of herrings. Jon describes the remarkable wealth fishing for this silver scaly coinage has brought the country. We move along the coastline and the other natural commodities the sea offers up but also mark the dwindling fish stocks of recent years because of overfishing and the unfortunate presence of microplastics, clogging up the digestive systems of sea mammals and fish in these same waters. Jon tells of how the sea has become a dumping ground for leftovers from war but sees hope in the reassuring ebb and flow, that harmony will be restored.

The Return of Bud Powell

This week Kate Molleson explores the life and work of a jazz giant in his centenary year: the amazing Bud Powell, in the company of Powell's biographer Peter Pullman. Focusing on Bud Powell as a performer, prioritising his own compositions but also appreciating the art of improvisation as spontaneous composition.

Bud Powell was born in 1924 and grew up in Harlem, against the backdrop of the Harlem Renaissance. He was a gifted pianist from a young age and became a pioneer of bebop. But he was a troubled soul and the great paradox of Bud Powell is how there could be such joy and expression in his music while his life was so painful.

Today Kate Molleson and Peter Pullman discuss Bud Powell's return to New York in 1964. After five years in Paris, Powell's homecoming was heralded with great fanfare. When he walked into Birdland – the jazz club where he'd reigned supreme in the late 40s and early 50s – he was given a 17-minute standing ovation. This was a mark of respect – a recognition, perhaps, of past, rather than present achievements, of a legacy that would live on beyond his own short life.

Peter Pullman's deeply researched biography of Bud Powell is called Wail: the Life of Bud Powell.

FRI 22:00 Late Junction (m0024mhw)

Jazz is a broad church

As this year's EFG London Jazz Festival kicks off, Verity Sharp takes a moment to explore some of the far reaches of the jazz universe, with music from artists who subvert expectations and push the boundaries of what "jazz" can be. We hear strange explorations on strings from Sun Ra & His Astro Infinity Arkestra, a domestic improvisation on saxophone from Audrey Lauro, and avant-Latin jazz from husband and wife duo Ibelisse Guardia Ferragutti & Frank Rosaly.

Elsewhere in the show, warped cassette recordings from Chicago trio Haptic, inspired by their earliest musical influences, and a distinctive fusion of Arabo-Andalusian and European piano traditions from Algerian musician Mustapha Skandrani.
