Jenni Murray's Women Composers

Why women, why now?

Women have always composed - but, far more than with their male contemporaries, obstacles have been thrown in their way. In this new series, Jenni Murray explores some of the avenues women composers have taken to overcome these challenges, offering insight into their music and illuminating the cultural and human stories which resonate today, as well as celebrating the music itself with a vibrant playlist of some of the very best music by women.

1: Why women, why now? To ask whether or why we still need to talk about "women composers" in the 21st Century, and to look at some of the historical reasons why women's voices have often not been heard and the progress made over the past couple of decades, Jenni is joined by Master of the King's Music Errollyn Wallen.

The playlist includes classics by Clara Schumann, Fanny Mendelssohn, Amy Beach and Ethel Smyth, alongside gems from contemporary composers Joan Tower and Sally Beamish, plus gaming music by Michiru Yamane and a film score by Laura Karpman - a barnstorming track from 2023 superhero movie The Marvels.

Katy Hamilton chooses her favourite version of Mendelssohn's Piano Trio No. 1 in D minor

Felix Mendelssohn's Piano Trio No. 1 in D minor, Op. 49, was written in 1839. Along with the famous Octet it is one of his most popular chamber works. When fellow-composer Robert Schumann reviewed the work he declared Mendelssohn to be "the Mozart of the nineteenth century, the brightest musician, who most clearly understands the contradictions of the age and is the first to reconcile them."

Verdi's La Traviata

Lisette Oropesa stars in Verdi's tragic masterpiece at the Royal Opera House, with Liparit Avetisyan and Christian Gerhaher. Presented by Georgia Mann.

La Traviata is so well known and loved these days that it's easy to forget how revolutionary it was: an opera telling the real-life story of a Parisian courtesan only a few years after her death. Verdi wanted it staged in contemporary dress, but that was a step too far for the operatic establishment of his day. Richard Eyre's perennial Royal Opera production is firmly set in Verdi's time, and this revival is illuminated by three star principals making their UK debuts in the roles. Cuban-American soprano Lisette Oropesa sings the courtesan Violetta Valéry who's made her way from poverty to the highest echelons of society - but finds her life empty and fears she has a terminal illness. The young poet Alfredo Germont, sung by Armenian tenor Liparit Avetisyan, offers her the chance of true love and happiness, however short-lived. But he's underestimated the horrified opposition of his father Giorgio - German baritone Christian Gerhaher singing the role for the very first time.

Love songs: Luzmira Zerpa in session

As Valentine's Day approaches, Lopa Kothari picks her favorite love songs from across the world, including a melancholic ballad from Quito and a spicy track from Marlene Dietrich and Rosemary Clooney. And, taking up the role of chief romantic serenader, Venezuelan singer-songwriter Luzmira Zerpa joins Lopa in the studio to perform a special love-themed session on voice and cuatro. A pivotal member of the London group Family Atlantica, Luzmira's music blends traditional folkloric music from Latin America with afrobeat, blues and psychedelic sounds.

Ursula Jones

Ursula Jones is "nothing short of a musical icon" – at least according to the Royal Philharmonic Society, who made her an honorary member last year at the age of 92. She has devoted her life to music, and has long championed the work of young performers – she gave Daniel Barenboim his first break as a conductor in London, when he was just 23.

Ursula was born in Lucerne in 1932, where her father was one of the founders of the Lucerne Festival, so famous musicians, including the likes of Richard Strauss, were never far away.

She came to London in 1954 and worked as a secretary for the Philharmonia Orchestra, moving on to co-found the English Chamber Orchestra in 1960. She married the eminent trumpet player Philip Jones, and later managed his Brass Ensemble.

Music isn't her only fascination: she completed a doctorate in archaeology at the age of 60, and in 2021 she cycled 100km to raise money for the charity Brass for Africa.

Ursula's choices include music by Britten, Mozart and Handel.

Early Music Today

Presenter Hannah French talks to Sir Simon Rattle on his recent 70th birthday about his knowledge and passion for early music, given his long association with the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment.

She also chats to internationally renowned recorder player Lucie Horsch about her recent work on the Frans Brüggen Project - an album to mark what would have been Brüggen's 90th birthday last year. With help from Brüggen's widow and daughter, Lucie was able to play and record repertoire on 14 of the precious historic recorders from the Golden Age of recorder making (1680s to 1740s) that are part of Brüggen's personal collection.

Hannah also pays tribute to harpsichordist Colin Tilney - a stalwart of the late 20th Century early music scene, who died in December; and to Claire van Kampen - composer, arranger, musical director, playwright and artistic advisor at Shakespeare's Globe, who passed away last month.

Plus Hannah will have all the latest Early Music news, looking forward to next month's REMA International Day of Early Music and the forthcoming new release of music by Palestrina in his 500th anniversary year by the Choir of Clare College, Cambridge.

Hepworth and the Cornish Landscape

Hepworth loved walking out into the wild Cornish landscape, and even before she moved there in 1939, she was aware of comparisons made between her abstract work and ancient stone megaliths. But how much closer did living in St Ives bring her to this ancient and fiercely independent county? Was this avant-garde artist welcomed, or did she remain an outsider?

Artists Lally MacBeth and Matthew Shaw live in Cornwall and created the Stone Club to celebrate pre-historic sites. Now their passion for dolmens, stone circles and standing stones leads them to reverse the gaze - to look at Hepworth sculptures in the light of ancient sites, comparing her work with the megaliths carved by the hand of sculptors over four thousand years ago.

Hepworth moved to Cornwall, with her second husband Ben Nicholson and four children, to escape the threat of bombing in London. She stayed for the rest of her life, an extraordinary decision for someone who wanted to be recognised internationally. But from this tiny fishing village she made megalithic monuments which would be exported across the world - to the UN in New York, and to London, and Paris.

Lally and Matthew enlist the knowledge and passion of Andy Norfolk, ancient stone expert and Hepworth fan, and James Kitto, photographer and President of CASPN (the Cornish Ancient Sites Protection Network), to visit The Merry Maidens and Mên-an-Tol.

They visit the Trewyn Studios in St Ives to look at the tools Barbara Hepworth used to make her sculptures and to talk to Tate Curator of Exhibitions, Katie Norris. They also hear stories of her working practise from acclaimed sculptor Brian Wall, one of her studio assistants back in the 1950s.

Finally, they watch the ceremony for initiating new bards at the Gorsedh Kernow in Callington, seeing close up a ritual that Hepworth herself went through in 1968. Sue Hill, of Wildworks in Redruth, and Kurt Jackson, poet and landscape painter, describe the sensation of being barded and recognised by Cornwall for their passion and their art.

Saint Joan of the Anthropocene

In Saint Joan of the Anthropocene, Linda Marshall Griffiths reimagines Bernard Shaw's classic play Saint Joan - setting the narrative in a contemporary context where Saint Joan is a young British climate activist. The drama is inspired by Greta Thunberg and Fridays For Future; a youth-led global climate strike movement.

One of the biggest questions for a young activist is: how far should I go? If nothing changes, even as politicians promise change will come, then what do I do?

A genius may appear only once in a generation, but perhaps all those young people who understand what the world could look like, can become a new kind of genius that makes Joan's vision real.

A Sonic Tryst

Join Elizabeth Alker with a selection of fresh music from genre-defying artists as we journey through landscapes of ambient and experimental sounds. We'll hear a brand new piece from Erland Cooper, specially commissioned by Radio 3 for '25 for 25: Sounds of the Century', which pays tribute to David Attenborough's eight-decade-long career; classically-trained composer, performer, and producer Kaitlyn Aurelia Smith continues her exploration of the sound-worlds offered by modular and analogue synths with her new song 'Into Your Eyes', which touches on, in her words, "the fragile edge of love that embraces destruction"; and there'll be the chance to hear a brilliant track from the much-anticipated forthcoming album by experimental collective NYX.

MON 16:00 Composer of the Week (m001qv6)

José Maurício Nunes Garcia (1767-1830)

The Father of Brazilian Classical Music

Kate Molleson delves into José Garcia's early beginnings as the grandson of slaves.

Composer of the Week shines the spotlight on the Afro-Brazilian composer José Maurício Nunes Garcia. Hailed by some as the Father of Brazilian Classical Music, and compared by others to Mozart and Haydn, this series delves into the life and music of this once hugely prolific and popular composer. Born in Rio de Janeiro, both his parents were children of slaves. Thanks to his exceptional musical talents, Garcia was able to move from his poverty-stricken beginnings to the very top of his society. He became master of music at the cathedral. Later, when the Portuguese Court established themselves in the city, Garcia was appointed master of music at the Chapel Royal and court composer. Kate Molleson is joined by Professor Marcelo Hazan from the University of South Carolina and Professor Kirsten Schultz from Seton Hall University who help her explore Garcia's incredible life story and music.

A hugely influential teacher of music from early on, Garcia established his own free music school and was invited into the homes of the elite to teach their daughters. His trajectory wasn't always plain sailing however and he frequently encountered racism. When it came to Garcia entering the Priesthood in the early 1790s, he had to undergo a number of tests to prove his worth, including providing impeccable references to offset the official concerns about his family background. Garcia was ordained, and with his musical skills finally recognised by the Church and Portuguese Court, he became the go-to composer for Saints' Days, royal occasions, and other commissions. However, many European musicians who came to Rio de Janeiro were not keen to be conducted by someone of his race. Eventually, Brazil gained independence from the Portuguese Empire and Garcia's royal employers were returned to Portugal, leaving Garcia struggling during turbulent times.

In this first programme, Kate Molleson explores the city where José Garcia was born in 1767. Rio de Janeiro had been appointed the capital of Brazil a few years earlier, and with the development of the country's economy through gold mining, and later agriculture, there was a huge reliance upon the slave trade. Both Garcia's grandmothers were slaves and from very early on he used his skills in music to help support his family. The options for Garcia's future were few, and he saw the Priesthood as a means to a better life. Sacred music would be the main area in which Garcia would compose throughout his life, and he eventually became a Priest in the early 1790s.

Bruch's Violin Concerto No. 1 from Belfast

Conductor Alpesh Chauhan joins the Ulster Orchestra at the Ulster Hall in Belfast, beginning with Mendelssohn's poetically inspired overture "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage", premiered in 1828, after words from the poet Goethe.

Ukrainian violinist Aleksey Semenenko then takes to the stage in a performance of Bruch's Violin Concerto No. 1, one of the composer's most enduring and popular works, and a tour de force for the soloist. After its premier in 1866 the work was revised with the help of the violinist Joseph Joachim, after which the final version was completed and is what we use today.

Before the Schumann, a work by the 19th century French composer and pianist Louise Farrenc- Overture No. 2 in Eb Major. The work was written in 1834 and is a standalone concert overture, and is not based on any literary inspirations- rather it is a purely musical work in sonata form.

To finish, Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D minor, a work completed in 1841 and then revised ten years later. Only a year before, the composer had been focussed on writing songs, producing some of his finest work including Liederkreis and Dichterliebe, and now a year later he turned his attention back to writing orchestral music. His wife, Clara, wrote in her diary in 1831 that she could hear him writing the 4th Symphony, and remarked that it would be "... another work that is emerging from the depths of his soul."

During the interval, John Toal will be in conversation with our soloist, Aleksey Semenenko

Michael Longley's Life of Poetry

The Early Years

The poet Michael Longley, who died on 22nd January 2025 at the age of 85, was described by Seamus Heaney as 'a keeper of the artistic estate, a custodian of griefs and wonders.' He devoted a lifetime to the art of poetry and won numerous poetry prizes.

In Episode 1 of this series of The Essay, first broadcast in 2024 and recorded to mark his 85th birthday, he talked with presenter Olivia O'Leary about his home town of Belfast and his love of jazz, saying that, 'Good poetry for me combines two things: meaning and melody.' He also loved the classics, which he studied at Trinity College Dublin, where he met his wife, Edna, a distinguished literary critic. He was one of a group of young poets that emerged from Northern Ireland in the 1960s and he describes the mutual support, rivalry and excitement of that time.

He reads his poems Elegy for Fats Waller and an extract from his poem River and Fountain from a new collection, Ash Keys: New Selected Poems (Cape Poetry), published to mark his 85th birthday on 27th July 2024. He also reads Bookshops from his collection Angel Hill and Poem from The Slain Birds.

TUE 16:00 Composer of the Week (m001qvvy)

José Maurício Nunes Garcia (1767-1830)

Preacher and Teacher

Kate Molleson explores Garcia's trajectory to the ultimate role as master of music at the cathedral in Rio de Janeiro.

Composer of the Week shines the spotlight on the Afro-Brazilian composer José Maurício Nunes Garcia. Hailed by some as the Father of Brazilian Classical Music, and compared by others to Mozart and Haydn, this series delves into the life and music of this once hugely prolific and popular composer. Born in Rio de Janeiro, both his parents were children of slaves. Thanks to his exceptional musical talents, Garcia was able to move from his poverty-stricken beginnings to the very top of his society. He became master of music at the cathedral. Later, when the Portuguese Court established themselves in the city, Garcia was appointed master of music at the Chapel Royal and court composer. Kate Molleson is joined by Professor Marcelo Hazan from the University of South Carolina and Professor Kirsten Schultz from Seton Hall University who help her explore Garcia's incredible life story and music.

A hugely influential teacher of music from early on, Garcia established his own free music school and was invited into the homes of the elite to teach their daughters. His trajectory wasn't always plain sailing however and he frequently encountered racism. When it came to Garcia entering the Priesthood in the early 1790s, he had to undergo a number of tests to prove his worth, including providing impeccable references to offset the official concerns about his family background. Garcia was ordained, and with his musical skills finally recognised by the Church and Portuguese Court, he became the go-to composer for Saints' Days, royal occasions, and other commissions. However, many European musicians who came to Rio de Janeiro were not keen to be conducted by someone of his race. Eventually, Brazil gained independence from the Portuguese Empire and Garcia's royal employers were returned to Portugal, leaving Garcia struggling during turbulent times.

José Garcia had to undertake a number of tests in order to enter the priesthood. His standing in Rio de Janeiro was such that he received excellent references from some of the most elite families. A few years later, around 1794, he established a free music school in the city. Soon, all the future musical talent of Rio de Janeiro would be trained in music by Garcia, for free. Garcia did recoup some form of reward in other ways. When the city or the cathedral wished to commission a new work for an event, Garcia was able to undercut his rival composers bidding for the same work, by employing his own students as musicians and pocketing their fees for himself. By the late 1790s the master of music at the cathedral was ill, and Garcia succeeded him in 1798. Garcia now held the top music job in the city.

TUE 19:30 Radio 3 in Concert (m0027m4p)

La Voix humaine with Danielle de Niese

The BBC National Orchestra of Wales are joined by their Principal Guest Conductor, Jaime Martín, to perform two French stage works. In the first half we hear Ravel's Mother Goose, a work which draws on classic children's fairy tales and began life as a piano duet for children. Tonight it will be heard in its final version, after Ravel had orchestrated and reworked the piece for a full ballet production. After the interval, soprano Danielle de Niese portrays the unnamed, spurned lover in a semi-staged performance of Poulenc's devastatingly brilliant one-act opera, La Voix humaine. The opera is based on Cocteau's play of the same name, and features the one-sided conversation of a woman on the phone with her ex-lover; as their past history is revealed, so too are the depths of her despair.

Presented by Verity Sharp, recorded in Hoddinott Hall on January 30th.

Michael Longley's Life of Poetry

Poems of World War 1

The Irish poet Michael Longley, who died on 22nd January 2025, was described by Seamus Heaney as 'a keeper of the artistic estate, a custodian of griefs and wonders.' He devoted a lifetime to the art of poetry and won numerous poetry prizes.

In the second episode of this series of The Essay, first broadcast in 2024, he talked with presenter Olivia O'Leary about his World War 1 poems, many of which were inspired by his own father's experience of having fought in the war, although he rarely talked about it. Michael's poems link the Great War and the Northern Ireland Troubles.

He reads his poems Citation, Harmonica, The Sonnets and Wounds from the collection Ash Keys: New Selected Poems (Cape Poetry), published to mark his 85th birthday on 27th July 2024.

Presenter: Olivia O'Leary

Producer: Claire Cunningham

WED 16:00 Composer of the Week (m001qvxp)

José Maurício Nunes Garcia (1767-1830)

Arrival of the Portuguese Court

Kate Molleson delves into Garcia's personal life when he broke his priestly vows of celibacy.

Composer of the Week shines the spotlight on the Afro-Brazilian composer José Maurício Nunes Garcia. Hailed by some as the Father of Brazilian Classical Music, and compared by others to Mozart and Haydn, this series delves into the life and music of this once hugely prolific and popular composer. Born in Rio de Janeiro, both his parents were children of slaves. Thanks to his exceptional musical talents, Garcia was able to move from his poverty-stricken beginnings to the very top of his society. He became master of music at the cathedral. Later, when the Portuguese Court established themselves in the city, Garcia was appointed Master of Music at the Chapel Royal and court composer. Kate Molleson is joined by Professor Marcelo Hazan from the University of South Carolina and Professor Kirsten Schultz from Seton Hall University who help her explore Garcia's incredible life story and music.

A hugely influential teacher of music from early on, Garcia established his own free music school and was invited into the homes of the elite to teach their daughters. His trajectory wasn't always plain sailing however and he frequently encountered racism. When it came to Garcia entering the Priesthood in the early 1790s, he had to undergo a number of tests to prove his worth, including providing impeccable references to offset the official concerns about his family background. Garcia was ordained, and with his musical skills finally recognised by the Church and Portuguese Court, he became the go-to composer for Saints' Days, royal occasions, and other commissions. However, many European musicians who came to Rio de Janeiro were not keen to be conducted by someone of his race. Eventually, Brazil gained independence from the Portuguese Empire and Garcia's royal employers were returned to Portugal, leaving Garcia struggling during turbulent times.

Today, Kate Molleson explores a pivotal moment: the Portuguese Court arrives in Rio de Janeiro under British naval escort, fleeing Napoleon. The city would now change dramatically, as thousands began to arrive from Europe. The prince regent quickly established a police system, which would take an active role in redefining the city, requisitioning houses for arriving courtiers, expanding and developing the city, and also carrying out a policy of Europeanisation too. Many musicians from Europe started to arrive, and this had an influence upon the music of José Garcia, who had now been appointed master of the music to the royal chapel. This elevation in Garcia's career came at a time of changes in his personal life too. Garcia had begun a relationship with Severiana Rosa de Castro, with whom he'd have six children. A serious risk for Garcia, considering his vows of celibacy as a priest.

José Maurício Nunes Garcia (1767-1830)

Rivalry at Court

Kate Molleson sees José Garcia forced to make way for a new composer, Marcos Portugal.

Composer of the Week shines the spotlight on the Afro-Brazilian composer José Maurício Nunes Garcia. Hailed by some as the Father of Brazilian Classical Music, and compared by others to Mozart and Haydn, this series delves into the life and music of this once hugely prolific and popular composer. Born in Rio de Janeiro, both his parents were children of slaves. Thanks to his exceptional musical talents, Garcia was able to move from his poverty-stricken beginnings to the very top of his society. He became master of music at the cathedral. Later, when the Portuguese Court established themselves in the city, Garcia was appointed master of music at the Chapel Royal and court composer. Eventually, Brazil gained independence from the Portuguese Empire and Garcia's royal employers were returned to Portugal, leaving Garcia struggling during turbulent times.

In today's programme, the Portuguese Court is now firmly established in Rio de Janeiro. They begin a series of changes within the city in order to make it more European. The prince regent was keen that a new royal theatre should be built, and he also sent for certain musicians to come to Brazil, including the composer Marcos Portugal. This newcomer began to take over Garcia's duties at the court. This was a difficult period for Garcia, and he had to take out a loan to ensure he could continue to support his growing family, including his mother, his partner, and six children.

THU 19:00 Classical Mixtape (m001n83n)

Classical music for focus or relaxation

Take time out with a soundscape of classical music including Eric Coates' overture The Merry-makers, Chopin's Fantaisie-Impromptu in C sharp minor which inspired the song "I'm always chasing rainbows" and the lilting waltz from Bernstein's Divertimento. Also in the mix are Byrd's Vigilante for 5 voices, Bach's "Awake, we are called by the voice of the watchmen" arranged for solo organ, a minuet for strings by Mozart and Rachel Portman's music for the film 'Emma'.

Drums thunder, trumpets sound and a nation finds its voice. Everyone knows Copland's Fanfare for the Common Man, but not many people know its second life as part of Copland's magnificent Third Symphony: a masterpiece as big and as brave as America itself. But that's just one side of the American dream. Barber's glorious Violin Concerto is as popular as it is poetic - and with good reason.

It's a typically expansive programme from Domingo Hindoyan, the charismatic Venezuelan conductor who's been making waves as principal conductor of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra. Joining him is violinist Tessa Lark, another artist with a burning urge to communicate. A visionary new masterpiece by Mexican composer Gabriela Ortiz blows open the doors of perception.

Poems of Mayo

The Irish poet Michael Longley, who died on 22nd January 2025, was described by Seamus Heaney as 'a keeper of the artistic estate, a custodian of griefs and wonders.' He devoted a lifetime to the art of poetry and won numerous poetry prizes.

In this episode of The Essay, first broadcast in 2024, he described his refuge from the city streets of Belfast in County Mayo, in one of the most remote and beautiful parts of the west of Ireland. He had been writing about its nature and landscape for over 50 years and it provided endless inspiration for poems. In more recent years he recognised the threat of climate change and he expresses the hope that younger generations will take greater care of the world.

He reads his poems The Leveret, Remembering Carrigskeewaun, Stonechat and The Comber from his collection Ash Keys: New Selected Poems (Cape Poetry), published to mark his 85th birthday on 27th July 2024, and Merlin from his collection The Slain Birds.

FRI 16:00 Composer of the Week (m001qvwn)

José Maurício Nunes Garcia (1767-1830)

Decline into Poverty

Kate Molleson sees Garcia struggle after the Portuguese Court abandons Brazil.

Composer of the Week shines the spotlight on the Afro-Brazilian composer José Maurício Nunes Garcia. Hailed by some as the Father of Brazilian Classical Music, and compared by others to Mozart and Haydn, this series delves into the life and music of this once hugely prolific and popular composer. Born in Rio de Janeiro, both his parents were children of slaves. Thanks to his exceptional musical talents, Garcia was able to move from his poverty-stricken beginnings to the very top of his society. He became master of music at the cathedral. Later, when the Portuguese Court established themselves in the city, Garcia was appointed master of music at the Chapel Royal and court composer. Kate Molleson is joined by Professor Marcelo Hazan from the University of South Carolina and Professor Kirsten Schultz from Seton Hall University who help her explore Garcia's incredible life story and music.

A hugely influential teacher of music from early on, Garcia established his own free music school and was invited into the homes of the elite to teach their daughters. His trajectory wasn't always plain sailing however and he frequently encountered racism. When it came to Garcia entering the Priesthood in the early 1790s, he had to undergo a number of tests to prove his worth, including providing impeccable references to offset the official concerns about his family background. Garcia was ordained, and with his musical skills finally recognised by the Church and Portuguese Court, he became the go-to composer for Saints' Days, royal occasions, and other commissions. However, many European musicians who came to Rio de Janeiro were not keen to be conducted by someone of his race. Eventually, Brazil gained independence from the Portuguese Empire and Garcia's royal employers were returned to Portugal, leaving Garcia struggling during turbulent times.

The last decade in José Garcia's life was difficult. In 1821 King John VI returned to Portugal with much of his court, taking most of the treasury funds with him. Financially, Brazil was in free fall, and the king's son Pedro was forced to remove benefits and stipends. Garcia found his income severely cut, and he petitioned Pedro to reinstall his income, or at least give him a salary for all the free music teaching he undertook. Pedro declined, and Garcia decided to close his music school for good. Pedro declared Brazil's independence in 1822, and with financial and social upheaval in the years to follow, Garcia faded from view in the city where he'd held the top music jobs at both court and cathedral. He died in poverty in 1830.
