Following its successful premiere at the Salle Pleyel in Paris in 1932, by the pianist Marguerite Long, Ravel's Piano Concerto in G major quickly toured across multiple European and American destinations, and became an instant hit. After attended the work's debut, the critic Émile Vuillermoz praised Ravel for his profound invention' and 'freshness of inspiration', and yet the composer appears to have taken the concerti of Mozart and Saint-Saens as a structural model, even declaring that the concluding movement was conceived 'in accordance with the most immutable traditions'. Ravel's shimmering orchestration, deployment of instrumental effects, and jazz-inflected harmonies, nevertheless, belie the innovative spirit with which he imbued the work. 1545 Record of the Week: Andrew's top pick. SAT 21:35 Music Planet (m002kq67)
The Ukrainian Bandura in Three Tracks

Kathryn Tickell shares three traditional bandura tracks picked by Julian Kytasty, music director of the New York Bandura Ensemble. Born in Detroit but descending from a Ukrainian family of refugees who fled the country after World War II, Julian is a third generation player of the bandura, a stringed instrument similar to the lute and the zither and typical of Ukraine.

Elsewhere in the show, Kathryn selects new releases including Irish music performed on banjo and harmonica courtesy of Enda Scahill and Joel Andersson, improvisations on herdanger fiddle from Norway, and a resurfaced track from 1980s Rwanda from wife and husband duo Bizimungu Diudonne and Agnes Umbibizi.

SUN 09:00 Sunday Morning (m002kqbc)
Three hours of classical sparkle

Today, Sarah shares a Chopin waltz that shimmers, a brilliant recording of one of Dvorak's sprite-like symphonic dances, and a famously difficult concert piece by Monti played on the mandolin.

There's also a piece that started life as a test for student musicians, a joyful motet by Bach, and the sublime second movement of Bruckner's seventh symphony.

Plus, today's Choral Reflection by Ukrainian composer Natalia Tsupryk is inspired by renewal and perseverance in times of darkness.

A Tandem Production for BBC Radio 3.

Hollie McNish

Hollie McNish has been writing poems about – as she puts it – 'anything and everything' since she was seven years old. Her work now reaches audiences of millions, through her books, performances and short videos, making her one of the UK's most widely shared poets.

In 2017 she won the Ted Hughes Award for her book Nobody Told Me, a collection of poetry and diary entries that she kept from the moment she discovered she was pregnant until her daughter was three. She has published six other collections, including her most recent, Virgin, which explores how one six letter word holds such power.

Her choices include music by Telemann, Joseph Bologne Chevalier de Saint-George, Nina Simone and Tchaikovsky.

SUN 13:30 Music Map (m002kqbb)
A journey to Berlioz's overture Le Corsaire

Sara Mohr-Pietsch takes to the high seas to map Berlioz's dramatic overture Le Corsaire. Inspired in part by Lord Byron's swash-buckling poem of the same name, Berlioz packs in romance, listing waves, unsteady feet and a dash of derring-do. Along the way, Sara explores Vivaldi's tempestuous Adriatic and Debussy's Channel at play, and stops at the French Riviera for a mid-century festival performance by Miles Davis. There's music by author James Fennimore Cooper's super-fan Schubert, along with classical music's very own chivalrous swordsman, Joseph Bologne. And there are 'ahoy there my hearties' from a mutiny of pirates - courtesy of Purcell, Malcolm Arnold, and who else but Gilbert and Sullivan.

Palestrina Rediscovered

Hannah French is joined by conductor Graham Ross to explore some modern rediscoveries of Palestrina's music, 500 years after the composer's birth. In recent years, Graham has conducted a number of first recordings of Palestrina's works, including the Missa Sine nomine with the Bevan Family Consort, and more recently, the Missa Emendemus in melius with the choir of Clare College Cambridge. Hannah and Graham also discuss how Palestrina can be placed in a historical context by hearing his music alongside works by some of the composer's English contemporaries, including Mundy and Byrd.

SUN 18:00 Words and Music (m002kqbp)

Fire

Readers Alex Kingston and Iain Glen consider the element which has fascinated humans for over one-and-a-half million years: fire. In poetry and prose they reflect on fire's power to fuel and destroy, its beauty and ability to create ugliness, the way it can purify and refine what's raw.

Charlotte Brontë praises Jane Eyre's quick thinking to prevent a house fire, whilst Matilda in Hilaire Belloc's poem raises a false alarm. Elsewhere, a diary entry by Samuel Pepys recalls the morning after the Great Fire of London, and Jack Spicer takes us to hell alongside Orpheus on his quest for Euridice.

Fiery music includes a Mexican conga by composer Arturo Márquez. Verdi explores the infernos of hell, Judith Weir depicts musical embers and Beethoven is inspired by the punishment of Prometheus, who took fire from the gods and gave it to humanity.

Producer in Salford: Joseph Zubier

Requiems for the Firestorm - Dresden's Musical Aftermath

80 years ago, on a beautiful February night, Allied bombers transformed Dresden into fiery ruins, killing some 25,000 people, levelling a jewel of European Baroque and a cradle of so much beautiful music making. Among the survivors of the firestorm was Rudolf Mauersberger, Kantor of the legendary Kreuzchor. 11 of his choristers were killed that night. For three days he walked home to his tiny village of Mauersberg in the Ore mountains. Within months he had finished the motet, Wie liegt die Stadt so wüst (How desolate lies the city). Gathering surviving choristers amid the ruins of the Kreuzkirche they performed to a hushed audience on August 4th 1945. Offering hope and continuity, the motet drew, ironically, on the Lamentations of Jeremiah and the destruction of Jerusalem. Compelled, Mauersberger would soon craft a Requiem marking the city's fate. More music flowed.

Summoned to Dresden to score a propaganda film, Shostakovich wrote his 8th Quartet instead - a piece for his own tormented soul. For 80 years, every February 13th, after bells ring out their lamentations, people have gathered to hear requiems, motets and berceuses. But today how do you mark the destruction of a city, greatly restored, where few living remember the event? This year, Sven Helbig's Requiem A had its first performance in Dresden on February 13th and then in London in October - a Requiem for the living in a time of renewed war.

Historian Katja Hoyer explores 80 years of sounding Dresden's destruction and musical resurrection, and wonders how the music has interacted with the complex memory politics of state Socialism, fascism and attempts at erasure brought by Reunification.

Harry Partch: Ancient Greece, carpentry and hearing between the lines

Kate Molleson and Gillian Moore present BBC Radio 3's series exploring the pivotal 'modern' musical works of the 20th century, the groundbreaking composers who created them, and the radical cultural and artistic movements which gave rise to them. In this episode, Kate explores the homemade instruments and microtonal experimentation of the boho American radical Harry Partch, leading to a performance of his piece And on the Seventh Day Petals Fell in Petaluma. Along the way, we'll stumble upon a forgotten Australian modernist who was working with the alternative tuning systems as early as the 1920s, discover how Partch's ultra modern music was inspired by Ancient Greece, and learn what the more modern popular maverick Tom Waits had to say about Partch's music.

Mozart live from Wigmore Hall

Linton Stephens showcases the best performances by BBC orchestras, choirs, ensembles and other great performing groups from Europe and around the globe.

The week begins with a live concert from London's Wigmore Hall, with pianist Alexandre Tharaud paying tribute to his native Paris and its vibrant musical history. Beginning with Mozart, his imaginative programme moves via Poulenc's tender homage to Édith Piaf and Gérard Pesson's 'piano chanson' after the legendary poet-singer Barbara, to Alexis Weissenberg's toe-tapping take on a Charles Trenet hit.

The Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra are our ensemble in focus this week, with music stretching from Haydn to Prokofiev. Today, we hear them in a pair of Shakespearean pieces: Richard Strauss's tone poem Macbeth and Mendelssohn's beloved Overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream.

Plus we are spending time all week at this year's East Neuk Festival, which took place in June. From the picturesque stretch of Fife coastline we hear former Radio 3 New Generation Artists the Pavel Haas Quartet perform music by Beethoven, and clarinettist Sergio Pires performs solo music by Stravinsky.

Johann Strauss the younger

Waltzing in Vienna

Donald Macleod explores the life and work of Johann Strauss
II, the "waltz king" as he strives to make it in Vienna, a city whose music scene was dominated by his own father.

In the composer's 200th anniversary year, Donald Macleod explores the life and work of Johann Strauss II, who became so popular for his operettas and Viennese waltzes that he would be dubbed "The Waltz King". In his time his huge popularity was akin to a pop star or Hollywood film icon today, and his music filled the ballrooms of Europe and America. Over the course of the week, we'll see how he made his name, and overcame setbacks to become one of the most famous figures in all of Europe.

In Monday's episode, Donald explores how Strauss strove to make it in Vienna, a city whose music scene was dominated by, among others, his own father. Despite being discouraged from pursuing a career in music, before the age of 20, Strauss had formed his own orchestra and made his debut appearance in the city. However, he didn't have it easy, and was forced to look for work outside of Vienna, with his father's popularity far outweighing his own. This despite a scandal which engulfed the elder Strauss, as after a string of affairs, Johann Junior's mother instigated divorce proceedings.

Schubert's Unfinished Symphony

The Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra performs a highly lyrical programme of symphonies by Schubert and Zemlinsky, and conducted by Mark Wigglesworth. They are joined by two of the most sought-after singers, the soprano Claudia Boyle and the baritone Roderick Williams

Schubert started writing his 8th Symphony in B minor in 1822, six years before his death, but only completed two movements.
Nobody knows why he left the work unfinished, but the two movements that exist have become some of Schubert's most beloved music, full of powerful drama and breathtaking melodies.

Alexander Zemlinsky's Lyric Symphony owes a clear debt to his contemporary Mahler and his Das Lied von der Erde. He looked East to set poems by the Bengali writer Rabindranath Tagore and creating a stunning seven-movement operatic symphony that explores the ideas of longing and desire.

Presented by Martin Handley and recorded on 8th October at the Lighthouse in Poole.

6. Shropshire

Matthew Bannister is in Shropshire as he travels across England to find out about the music discovered in County Record Offices and reimagined for the 21st Century by the folk musician and Nancy Kerr.

In Bishop's Castle, Matthew is tracking down Thomas Owens, a thatcher, who also composed West Gallery music for local church bands and choirs in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Nancy Kerr and the Melrose Quartet lead a crowd of hundreds in singing one of Owens' psalm settings at the Shrewsbury Folk Festival, as they rewild his music back into the county where it was composed. Matthew visits the Shropshire Archives in Shrewsbury to examine Thomas Owens' remarkable manuscript music book, The Shropshire Harmony. The music has been explored by researchers from the Music Heritage Place project and Professor Stephen Rose, of Royal Holloway, University of London who leads the team joins Matthew to guide him through it.

Music is performed by The Melrose Quartet: Jess Arrowsmith, Richard Arrowsmith, James Fagan and Nancy Kerr

Mendelssohn's Octet

Linton Stephens showcases an afternoon of specially recorded performances from the UK and from around the globe.

The Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra are our ensemble in focus this week, with music stretching from music Haydn to Prokofiev. The programme opens with Richard Strauss's extravagant tone poem depicting the folk prankster Till Eulenspiegel, and later in the programme we'll also hear Rachmaninov's trio of Symphonic Dances.

We're also spending time all week at this year's East Neuk Festival, which took place in June on the picturesque Fife coast. Two superb string groups – the Belcea and Castalian Quartets – join forces for Mendelssohn's ebullient Octet, and there's also music by Kurtág, his Hommage to Robert Schumann, performed by clarinettist Sergio Pires and friends.

And there's a highlight from this year's George Enescu International Festival in Bucharest, with Polish pianist Jan Lisiecki joining the Academy of St Martin in the Fields for Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3.

Johann Strauss the younger

One Strauss

Donald Macleod explores how Johann Strauss II fared after his father's death, driving himself relentlessly hard to try to establish himself as the pre-eminent musician in Vienna.

In the composer's 200th anniversary year, Donald Macleod explores the life and work of Johann Strauss II, who became so popular for his operettas and Viennese waltzes that he would be dubbed "The Waltz King". In his time his huge popularity was akin to a pop star or Hollywood film icon today, and his music filled the ballrooms of Europe and America. Over the course of the week, we'll see how he made his name, and overcame setbacks to become one of the most famous figures in all of Europe.

In Wednesday's episode, Donald explores how Johann Strauss II fared after his father's death, driving himself relentlessly hard to try to establish himself as the pre-eminent musician in Vienna. In the wake of this unbearable workload, the composer falls ill, with one paper even reporting his death!

The Grand Bazaar of Istanbul: a trading place of civilisations, in which the tales told are as countless as the treasures for sale. The eternal city of Rome, where la dolce vita thrives amid the memory of far older – and more savage – celebrations. An Irish legend of banshees and night terrors, retold by two of 21st century Britain's liveliest musical voices and highlighting the wonderfully communicative gifts of saxophone virtuoso Jess Gillam.

Well, they say a musical picture is worth a thousand words, and for Turkish composer Fazil Say, his vibrant home city represents a place "without any borders, not even in the mind." Closing the concert is Respighi's Feste romane: a blockbuster Roman tone-poem that certainly doesn't hold back.

The Song Detectorists

8. Wiltshire

Matthew Bannister is in Wiltshire as he travels across England to find out about the music discovered in County Record Offices and reimagined for the 21st Century by the folk musician Nancy Kerr and The Melrose Quartet.

He's in Christian Malford, with local historian Lucy Whitfield, in search of Harriet Wiles a woman with a taste for patriotic songs of the sea. She later married a naval captain, one of Nelson's "Band of Brothers", Sir Davidge Gould. Professor Kirsten Gibson, from Newcastle University and the Music, Heritage, Place project talks to Matthew about the songs of Charles Dibden, which were also collected by Jane Austen.

Music is performed by The Melrose Quartet: Jess Arrowsmith, Richard Arrowsmith, James Fagan and Nancy Kerr.

Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique

Linton Stephens showcases the best performances in specially made recordings of orchestras, choirs, ensembles from Europe and around the globe.

We end our week spent in the company of the Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra with a pair of much-loved orchestral works. Augustin Hadelich is the soloist in Mendelssohn's joyful Violin Concerto, and Berlioz's groundbreaking Symphonie Fantastique shows off the orchestra at its most vivid. Plus we hear the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra in a performance of Stravinsky's Firebird suite.

And we take leave of the picturesque coastline of Fife and this summer's East Neuk Festival with another chamber highlight from the event, the Belcea Quartet playing Mozart's 'Hoffmeister' string quartet.

Johann Strauss the younger

Highs and Lows

Donald Macleod explores the final years of Strauss' life when he was lauded as a celebrity figure wherever he went, but also endured personal losses and difficulties.

In the composer's 200th anniversary year, Donald Macleod explores the life and work of Johann Strauss II, who became so popular for his operettas and Viennese waltzes that he would be dubbed "The Waltz King". In his time his huge popularity was akin to a pop star or Hollywood film icon today, and his music filled the ballrooms of Europe and America. Over the course of the week, we'll see how he made his name, and overcame setbacks to become one of the most famous figures in all of Europe.

In Friday's programme, Donald explores the final years of Strauss' life when he was lauded as a celebrity figure wherever he went – an 1890 poll to find the most popular European personalities saw him come 3rd! However, it was a period during which he also endured personal losses and difficulties. Donald finds him visiting America to conduct an extraordinary series of concerts, writing a full scale opera, and marrying for a second, and then a third time.

The Song Detectorists

10. Bedfordshire

In the Bedfordshire Archives, Professor Stephen Rose shows Matthew the legal books of Mark Newman a 17th century notary. Amongst the densely written material there is a song about the joys of tobacco smoking and a ballad, Lay By Your Reason. Nancy Kerr tells Matthew that it is a sister song to Dominion of The Sword, a ballad from earlier in the 1600s best known now because of its interpretation by the folk singer Martin Carthy.

The folk musician Nancy Kerr is co-investigator on the Music, Heritage Place project and has been taking the music found in the archives and reimagining it for the twenty-first century and for performance by her group, The Melrose Quartet (Jess Arrowsmith, Richard Arrowsmith, James Fagan and Nancy Kerr).

Matthew also hears about an amazing discovery made by the researchers on the project. In the Norfolk archives, they discovered music written by Henry Purcell in a music book repurposed as an index to the records of Thetford town council. It's the first discovery of music in Purcell's hand for more than 30 years. One of the pieces is an early version of Purcell's G minor Allemand that otherwise is known from the version printed by his widow in 1696 (a year after Purcell died). The Thetford version probably dates from the early 1690s. It has a lot of differences from the printed version, including some different notes, different ways in which the notes are sustained for resonance, and a lot of different ornamentation. The piece has been specially recorded for this programme and is played by Stephen Rose on harpsichord.

Imaginal soundtracks and experimental praise song

Verity Sharp embarks on an ear-opening journey into the far reaches of sound. On Traigh Eais beach in Barra, in the Outer Hebrides, we meet a man in free flow, spitballing a rhythmically-impassioned hymn in constructed language over the dunes and to a backdrop of gently-lapping tides. In New York, the former Late Junction session artist Saint Abdullah (brothers Mohammad and Mehdi Mehrabani-Yeganeh) offer up a new musical score for the powerful 2022 short film The Wound is Where the Light Enters, directed by Iranian filmmaker Somyeh. Plus, Verity selects a track from a special archival release from 1980s Rwanda. We hear calls for unity in a divided nation via a beautifully inventive stretching of traditional Rwandan praise song, enhanced by electronic wizardry, in an eerie presaging of the coming Rwandan Genocide.
