Conductor Nathalie Stutzmann on going big with Bruckner

Tom Service with guests, stories and the perfect classical soundtrack for the weekend!

Tom meets conductor and singer Nathalie Stutzmann to talk about recording Bruckner's massive 4th Symphony. Remarkably, her new Bruckner recording is the first time a woman has recorded the piece with a major US orchestra. Described as "a genius who makes the music irresistible", Nathalie chats to Tom about straddling her many musical worlds, from Bruckner and Bach to Wagner's operas, why she believes in being a risky conductor and the music she fell in love with as a child.

Tom talks to the experimental musical duo KOGG: AKA composers Selena Kay and Cerys Hogg. Both formally trained - Selena has her roots in contemporary classical composition and Cerys in jazz improvisation - their new album Mechanista is built from everyday objects that they construct into electronic instruments: spanners, toy whistles, brass, elastic bands and broken piano keys. They talk about blending composition, DIY sound invention and playfulness in their music.

SAT 12:00 Earlier... with Jools Holland (m002wg3l)

Jools and guests share their musical favourites

Jools shares his lifelong passion for classical music and the beautiful connections with jazz and blues. With fascinating guests each week, who bring their own favourite music.

Today, Jools's choices include music by Brahms, William Byrd and Miles Davis with performances by Vikingur Olafsson and the Ora Singers. His guest is the singer, guitarist and songwriter Eric Bibb, who performs with Jools in the studio and introduces music he loves by Joseph Canteloube, Florence Price and Antônio Carlos Jobim.

SAT 13:00 Key Changes: Radio 3's Essential History of Classical Music (m002wg3n)

1527: The Church on Fire

May 1527. Rome is under attack. As imperial troops surge through the city, looting churches and palaces, Pope Clement VII abandons the Vatican and escapes through a secret passage to Castel Sant'Angelo. The Sack of Rome devastates the capital of Catholic Europe: composers scatter, musical institutions collapse, and the city's artistic life is left in ruins. Yet from this moment of crisis emerges a period of intense reflection, reinvention and reform. In the decades that follow, musicians, theorists and church leaders will reshape the sound of sacred music - from the madrigals and laments of those who fled, to the new ideals of clarity and devotion that take hold in Rome's chapels and choirs.

Gillian Moore is joined by a roster of distinguished historians for this major new BBC Radio 3 series, charting a course through 1000 years of classical music history. For the first eight programmes, historian Michael Wood is in the chair, as together they explore the bold new sound worlds of the Middle Ages and Renaissance.

Producer: Amelia Parker
Academic Consultant: Professor Laura Tunbridge, University of Oxford
Story Consultant: Kate Leys
Series Editor for BBC Audio: Emma Harding

Key Changes theme tune composed by Joseph Howard and performed by the BBC National Orchestra of Wales, conducted by Kerem Hasan.

SAT 14:00 Record Review (m002wg3q)

Brahms's Piano Concerto No. 2 in Building a Library with Joanna MacGregor and Andrew McGregor

Andrew McGregor with the best new classical releases, joined by composer Soosan Lolavar and pianist Joanna MacGregor, who surveys recordings of Brahms's Piano Concerto No. 2 and picks her favourite.

c2.10pm Composer Soosan Lolavar joins Andrew to spotlight a batch of new releases that have caught her ear.

3pm Building a Library: pianist Joanna MacGregor joins Andrew to survey recordings of Brahms's Piano Concerto No. 2 and make a top recommendation.
"I want to tell you that I have written a very small piano concerto with a very small and pretty scherzo", wrote Brahms to Clara Schumann of his new concerto in 1881. He was being ironic. Brahms's Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat is famously one of the grandest-scaled piano concertos in the cannon. Following 22 years after his first concerto, the work was an immediate success and has remained popular with pianists and audiences ever since.

3.45pm Record of the Week: the new release that has most impressed Andrew this week.

SAT 16:00 Sound of Cinema (m002wg3s)

Edith is joined by composer John Harle and presenter Mark Forrest

From iconic themes to modern masterpieces — your weekly roundup of film scores and movie music with Edith Bowman.

On this week's programme, we spotlight landmark jazz scores, turning our focus to musician and composer Miles Davis as part of our celebrations marking the centenary of his birth.

In Harmonising Hollywood, composer Jon Harle discusses Duke Ellington's music for the 1959 crime thriller Anatomy of a Murder, while presenter Mark Forrest shares his Pick of the Flicks, featuring music from a 1988 crime comedy-drama.

Plus, all the latest soundtrack releases alongside a look back at some timeless classical film scores.

SAT 17:00 This Classical Life (m002wg3v)

Jess Gillam with... Joseph Tawadros

Jess Gillam hosts a listening party with the Egyptian-Australian oud virtuoso and composer Joseph Tawadros. Joseph performs live as a soloist, in duo with his brother James on Egyptian percussion, with his jazz quartet or with chamber orchestras and symphony orchestras all over the world. He has won 8 ARIA awards and has released over 20 albums, including his latest, 'The Forgotten Path to Humanity'. He is playing live at Upstairs at Ronnie Scott's in London on Monday 25th May. His choices include music by Rachmaninov, a life-changing Robert Plant collaboration, and legendary Egyptian artist Umm Kulthum. Jess brings along music by Debussy, Richard Strauss and a slice of joy from The Alehouse Sessions.

SAT 18:00 Opera on 3 (m002wg3x)

Puccini's Turandot

Puccini's final opera live from the Metropolitan Opera in New York, starring Anna Pirozzi as the vengeful princess Turandot and Brian Jagde as Prince Calaf.

The beautiful Princess Turandot will only marry a man who can answer her three riddles - those who fail will be killed the following dawn. But Prince Calaf is not to be dissuaded from having a go, having fallen in love with her at first sight. With a rich soundworld including authentic Chinese melodies, Puccini's final masterpiece is sung by a top cast conducted by Oksana Lyniv.

Presented live from the Met by Debra Lew Harder and Ira Siff.

Margaret Busby, publisher and editor

Margaret Busby is a publisher and editor who's helped change our literary landscape. She's been lauded by the writer Zadie Smith as the cheerleader, instigator, organiser, defender and celebrator of black arts, something she's done for nearly 60 years.

She started young - she was just 23 years old when she co-founded the publishers Allison and Busby with Clive Allison in 1967. Free from the usual industry rules and with little money or experience, they began with five shilling poetry paperbacks and went on to champion new work as well as established writers from all backgrounds. Margaret's drive to showcase often overlooked or neglected talent led to two groundbreaking anthologies of women writers, Daughters of Africa and New Daughters of Africa.

Margaret's music includes Bach and Chevalier de Saint-Georges, along with jazz greats Duke Ellington and Miles Davis.

Radio 3 is celebrating the centenary of Miles Davis' birth in the coming week across numerous programmes including Composer of the Week, Round Midnight and The Essay.

Hummel's Trumpet Concerto

Sara Mohr-Pietsch guides us on a musical journey towards Hummel's Trumpet Concerto. The Austrian composer Johann Nepomuk Hummel developed close connections with the greatest composers of the late classical and early romantic periods, from his teachers Haydn and Mozart to Beethoven and Schubert. In this episode, we'll explore those connections, along with the evolution of trumpet music - from an Italian baroque concerto composed by Giuseppe Torelli, to a jazz masterpiece by Miles Davis.

Musical Minds

Rethinking listening and curiosity with percussionist Evelyn Glennie

Psychotherapist and broadcaster Nemone Metaxas delves into our psychological relationship with music and talks to some of classical music's brightest stars to untangle why music can be such a powerful presence in our lives.

This week, Nemone is joined by the percussionist Dame Evelyn Glennie to explore what it means to really listen, how an audience shapes her performances and why curiosity is the most important element in music and in life.

We'll also hear from our resident psychologist Dr Claire Renfrew, who explains what happens in our brains when we improvise and how we understand rhythm.

Tides of Sound: The Story of St.GIGA

At the crest of Japan's economic bubble, in the spring of 1991, a radio station unlike any other began broadcasting from satellite into homes across the country. St.GIGA carried no news, no commercials, no DJs. Instead, it offered an unbroken flow of music, field recordings from around the world, commissioned poetry, and the quiet announcement of tides. Its programming was not built around schedules or programme titles, it was built around the sea.

Conceived by creative director Hiroshi Yokoi, St.GIGA, was guided by a single, radical idea: that sound could be synchronised with the natural rhythms of the earth. The station followed a tide table rather than a broadcast clock. As the tide rose, the music intensified; classical works, symphonies, techno, anything that embodied what Yokoi called "the beauty of the blue planet seen from space." As the tide retreated, the music softened into ambient and environmental sound. On full moon nights, natural sound increased. On new moon nights, it quietened. The station's idiom, repeated in dozens of languages by voices of all ages from around the world, said simply: I'm here. I'm glad you're there. We are St.GIGA.

Tides of Sound is both a documentary about St.GIGA and an attempt to recreate the experience of listening to it. Drawing on original interviews with people who made the station; programmer Yoko Yokouchi, composer Yoshio Ojima, sound archivist Yoshihiro Kawasaki, in-house poet Michico Ryo and producer Akira Ishii, alongside new research by Spencer Doran, the American musician and scholar who has done so much to bring St.GIGA to international attention, the programme weaves together testimony, archive recordings, field recordings made by the station's own audio teams, poetry written for St.GIGA's launch by Michico Ryo, and readings from the station's founding book, Yume no choryu, Current of Dreams, written by Yokoi himself in 1991.

What emerges is a portrait of a genuinely utopian broadcasting experiment and of the particular moment in history that made it possible and necessary. Tokyo in 1991 was a city at the end of its bubble, still glittering on the surface but with an undercurrent of anxiety, a sense that the era was about to change. Into that atmosphere, St.GIGA offered something almost impossibly gentle: time to listen. Not information, not entertainment in any conventional sense, but the flow of time itself, translated into sound.

The station's philosophical roots reached far. Yokoi drew on the concept of kankyo ongaku, environmental music, that had taken shape in Japan in the previous decade, and on the tradition of ambient music then being developed internationally, including the work of Brian Eno, which featured heavily in the station's programming. But St.GIGA's deepest inspiration was something more cosmic. Yokoi gifted each member of staff, on their first day, a copy of The Home Planet, a book of photographs taken from space, compiled by Kevin Kelly in 1988, in which astronauts described the experience of looking back at Earth. He accompanied it with a handwritten note: Please play the Gaia Symphony beautifully. The studios were named Moon and Water. The monitor in every room showed an image of the Earth floating in space.

St.GIGA broadcast live, 24 hours a day, for several years before financial pressures forced a gradual move to recorded programming. Nintendo briefly became an investor, recognising the technical potential of the satellite infrastructure. But the station could not be sustained, and it eventually closed. What it left behind was harder to quantify: a community of listeners who described the experience as therapeutic, even transformative.

This is a production from Munk Studios produced by Ben Fawks. With thanks to Mari Kimura and Toyohiro Suzuki for their local Japanese support and many thanks to St.GIGA staff members Akira Ishii, Yoshihiro Kawasaki, Yoshio Ojima, Michico Ryo and Yoko Yokouchi for being interviewed and sharing their stories. Many thanks to Spencer Doran for his interview, reading and all his expertise in St.GIGA and for composing the music (with additional music credit to Satsuki Shibano for piano and Yoshio Ojima for processing). Thank you to Chris Wood for sound design, editing and mixing and mastering, Hinako Omori for editing and voice over work, and to the voice over artists Sadao Ueda, Dai Tabuchi, Meg Kubota, Yojiro Ichikawa and Mari Kimura. Opera on the terraces

Should the soundtrack of the 2026 Football World Cup be full of Classical music? British fans have been chanting to Verdi, humming along to Puccini and Handel - so why do we resist to label this music popular? Oskar Jensen, a historian of song, discovers how the eighteenth-century composer and travel writer Charles Burney might help explain how we define and label the music.

Dr Oskar Jensen, who leads a major project on mainstream song from 1520 to the present day at the University of Newcastle, speaks to Dr Katherine Hambridge, Associate Professor of Musicology at Durham University and to Professor Paul Whitty, composer and sound researcher at Oxford Brookes University.

James Baldwin

Adrian Lester reads from the novels and essays of the Black American writer James Baldwin, set alongside archive recordings of Baldwin and music including by Miles Davis, Florence Price, John Coltrane, George Walker and Oscar Peterson.

This programme contains some strong discriminatory language. Writer and civil rights activist James Baldwin was born in Harlem, New York on August 2, 1924, the eldest of nine children.

To be a black person in America, Baldwin once said, was to be "in a state of rage almost all of the time." The racial injustices he witnessed and endured were compounded by his experiences as a gay man, and his writing is deeply embedded in the nuances of racial and sexual identity.

Baldwin's first collection of essays, Notes of a Native Son, includes a haunting memoir of the life and death of his stepfather, an evangelical preacher, with whom he had a fraught relationship. During the summer of his fourteenth birthday, Baldwin underwent a dramatic religious conversion and served as a junior minister for three years in a small Pentecostal church, a period he wrote about in his semi-autobiographical first novel, Go Tell It on the Mountain. His second collection of essays, The Fire Next Time, is told in the form of two intensely personal 'letters', one of which is addressed to his 15-year-old nephew James.

We'll hear an extract from Giovanni's Room – the novel he published in 1956 which follows a young American man in Paris and explores bisexuality, power balances and social isolation. He became a public figure, taking part in debates and TV shows and publishing books which have been turned into Oscar-nominated films and documentaries, inspiring many later activists and writers.

Although Baldwin would claim that he didn't 'know anything about music', the prose of his novel Another Country attempts to emulate the sound of jazz musicians, and his fiction and non-fiction is punctuated with references to the blues, gospel and jazz. Today's Words and Music includes performances by Bessie Smith, John Coltrane and Nina Simone. We also hear classical work by Samuel Coleridge-Taylor and Margaret Bonds and an extract from an artwork by Tavares Strachan called There Is a Light in Darkness (blue neon, yellow neon and synchronised audio art installation, courtesy of Marian Goodman Gallery and the Artist, 2024.)

Music that leads us home ft. Keaton Henson

Composer Erland Cooper invites us to look within, hand-picking soothing sounds that conjure up the feeling of home. Erland shares music from Piotr Kurek, Ichiko Aoba and Gustav Mahler, and reflects on how music can help us connect with ourselves and our roots, diving into where sound and memory meet.

Also, the musician Keaton Henson shares his safe haven, selecting the song that resonates with the same frequency as his mind.

Elizabeth Alker invites virtuoso percussionist Beibei Wang to the Unclassified Listening Chair to share a track that transports her elsewhere. Beibei's mastery of classical and traditional Chinese techniques has seen her perform as a soloist with many of the world's most prestigious orchestras. Forever curious, she has also explored more experimental and contemporary forms, and her long-standing creative collaboration with composer Hannah Peel has resulted in the acclaimed new album 'The Endless Dance'.

Elsewhere in the programme, we'll hear from emerging independent producers whose work plays with orchestral textures and classical form as well as the latest sounds from a new generation of contemporary composers who look to embrace the spirit of rock, pop and electronica.

Wigmore Hall 125: Mendelssohn Octet

As part of Wigmore Hall's 125th Anniversary Festival two of today's acclaimed international quartets, the Modigliani from France and the Leonkoro from Germany, come together for a live performance of Mendelssohn's Octet. Their programme also includes music from Joaquín Turina - his colourful tone painting 'the Bullfighter's Prayer' - and music by the immensely talented Austro-Czech composer Erwin Schulhoff, whose life was prematurely cut short by the Second World War.

Following the celebratory live concert from Wigmore, Classical Live and Mark Forrest begin a fortnight in the company of ten of today's outstanding conductors. Classical Live presents recent specially made recordings drawing on concert performances from ten of the world's brightest stars of the podium. Today, the Finnish conductor Susanna Mälkki performs two symphonies from fellow Finn Jean Sibelius, including Sibelius's taut and profound 7th Symphony.

And Classical Live also features recordings from France of music by some of the great French Baroque masters of the keyboard, performed by harpsichordist Jean Rondeau - a musician at the forefront of a movement to bring the harpsichord and its repertoire to serve our times.

Miles Davis 100

Birth of the Cool

This week Kate Molleson explores the life and work of a cultural icon: trumpeter, composer and bandleader Miles Davis, who was born 100 years ago this week and remains one of the most innovative and influential figures in 20th-century music. Kate is joined throughout the week by the leading American jazz critic Nate Chinen. Together, they'll survey his vast recorded output, which spans five decades, prioritising his own compositions but also appreciating the art of improvisation as spontaneous composition.

Miles Davis was born in Illinois in May 1926 and grew up in East St. Louis. He enrolled at the Juilliard School of Music in New York City in 1944 but was quickly drawn to the bebop scene of 52nd Street, playing alongside Charlie Parker, with whom he made some of his first key recordings. From that point on, he was at the heart of almost every new development in jazz, from hard bop to post-bop, third stream, fusion and beyond, hand-picking key collaborators for his ever-changing sound, including composer-arranger Gil Evans, saxophonists John Coltrane and Wayne Shorter, keyboardist Herbie Hancock and, in his later years, the bassist and producer Marcus Miller. He made it his mission to be at the vanguard culturally and musically, rejecting convention and tradition in favour of pursuing innovation and the new thing.

Today, Kate Molleson and Nate Chinen explore Miles Davis's early life, his role in New York's bebop scene of the 1940s and the making of Birth of the Cool, the first project to involve his lifelong collaborator Gil Evans. We also hear about his struggles with addiction in the early 1950s but how he came through to record landmark hard bop sessions with the likes of Horace Silver and Art Blakey.

Half an hour of the finest classical music

Today's mixtape begins with the glowing warmth of Borodin's nocturne from his String Quartet No.2 in D major, its long-breathed melodies unfolding with quiet tenderness. The gentle mood continues in the lament of Rameau's Tristes apprêts from Castor et Pollux, before an unlikely pairing of bass guitar and saxophone reimagined in Scarlatti's Sonata in F minor, in an arrangement by Jess Gillam and Becker. Boulanger's Prelude in D-flat major for piano drifts in like a half-remembered dream, leading naturally to the expansive and deeply lyrical andante from Rachmaninov's Sonata in G minor for cello and piano. The mixtape closes with Morricone's unforgettable Love Theme from Cinema Paradiso.

Miles Beyond

Black Beauty

As a musician, Miles Davis might be best known as the sophisticated balladeer behind albums like Kind of Blue and Sketches of Spain, but he was also a political figure. This essay joins the dots between seemingly contrasting albums like Tutu (a reference to Archbishop Desmond Tutu, and the anti-apartheid movement) and the politically charged jazz-rock of his album dedicated to African American boxer, Jack Johnson. These albums reflect Davis's engagement with historical figures in his art, and the oppression he personally experienced, such as his infamous assault by a white policeman in 1959.

Miles Davis 100

Kind of Blue

This week Kate Molleson explores the life and work of a cultural icon: trumpeter, composer and bandleader Miles Davis, who was born 100 years ago today and remains one of the most innovative and influential figures in 20th-century music. Kate is joined throughout the week by the leading American jazz critic Nate Chinen. Together, they'll survey his vast recorded output which spans five decades, prioritising his own compositions but also appreciating the art of improvisation as spontaneous composition.

Miles Davis was born in Illinois 26 May 1926 and grew up in East St. Louis. He enrolled at the Juilliard School of Music in New York City in 1944 but was quickly drawn to the bebop scene of 52nd Street, playing alongside Charlie Parker, with whom he made some of his first key recordings. From that point on, he was at the heart of almost every new development in jazz, from hard bop to post-bop, third stream, fusion and beyond, hand-picking key collaborators for his ever-changing sound, including composer-arranger Gil Evans, saxophonists John Coltrane and Wayne Shorter, keyboardists Herbie Hancock and Joe Zawinul and, in his later years, the bassist and producer Marcus Miller. He made it his mission to be at the vanguard culturally and musically, rejecting convention and tradition in favour of pursuing innovation and the new thing.

Today, Kate Molleson and Nate Chinen explore the 1950s, a golden period for the trumpeter with the coming together of his First Great Quintet, featuring saxophonist John Coltrane, glorious orchestral collaborations with Gil Evans, an improvised film soundtrack recorded during a sojourn in Paris, and experiments in modal jazz culminating with his most famous release - sometimes described as the greatest jazz record ever made - Kind of Blue.

 Miles Beyond

The Man With The Horn

As part of Miles Davis 100 on Radio 3, celebrating the centenary of one of the most influential figures in 20th-century music, journalist Kevin Le Gendre explores the impact of Miles Davis on jazz and beyond, into popular culture.

Miles expanded the range of his instrument over five decades, pushing the trumpet beyond jazz clubs into the cinema, beginning with the score for Louis Malle's Ascenseur Pour L'Echafaud (1958). In the 1950s, he was celebrated as a "stylist" and "romanticist" who favoured slower tempos and a clear, vibrato-less sound, exemplified on the 1959 album, Kind of Blue. Composer Gil Evans noted that Davis was the first person to change the tone of the trumpet since Louis Armstrong. However, his restless creativity led to dramatic shifts. By the 1970s, he embraced rock, and funk, developing a harsh, abrasive, and powerful trumpet tone (e.g., Get Up With It), even using a wah-wah pedal.

Miles Davis 100

The Second Great Quintet

This week, Kate Molleson explores the life and work of a cultural icon: trumpeter, composer and bandleader Miles Davis, who was born 100 years ago this week and remains one of the most innovative and influential figures in 20th-century music. Kate is joined throughout the week by the leading American jazz critic Nate Chinen. Together, they'll survey his vast recorded output, which spans five decades, prioritising his own compositions but also appreciating the art of improvisation as spontaneous composition.

Miles Davis was born in Illinois 26 May 1926 and grew up in East St. Louis. He enrolled at the Juilliard School of Music in New York City in 1944 but was quickly drawn to the bebop scene of 52nd Street, playing alongside Charlie Parker, with whom he made some of his first key recordings. From that point on, he was at the heart of almost every new development in jazz, from hard bop to post-bop, third stream, fusion and beyond, hand-picking key collaborators for his ever-changing sound, including composer-arranger Gil Evans, saxophonists John Coltrane and Wayne Shorter, keyboardists Herbie Hancock and Joe Zawinul and, in his later years, the bassist and producer Marcus Miller. He made it his mission to be at the vanguard culturally and musically, rejecting convention and tradition in favour of pursuing innovation and the new thing.

Today, Kate Molleson and Nate Chinen focus on one of the most celebrated units in the history of jazz, made up of key players of the time who were all to become future stars in their own right - teenage drum prodigy Tony Williams, pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Ron Carter and saxophonist Wayne Shorter, whose own exploratory improvisations and original compositions were to be a defining element in the Miles Davis sound of the 1960s. We hear about the changing landscape for jazz during this decade with the advent of free jazz and the first seeds of fusion on the horizon.

Miles Beyond

Sound Adventurer

As part of Miles Davis 100 on Radio 3, journalist Kevin Le Gendre explores the impact of Miles Davis on popular culture.

This essay focuses on how Miles Davis became an early adopter of new technology, from electric keyboards to effects pedals and tape loops.

Miles embraced the synthesizer in the late 1960s, aiming to get a fuller range of voicings, a "Gil Evans sound in a small band". With producer Teo Macero, the studio became a vehicle for innovation: they treated recorded sound as a fluid material, using post-production and tape-cutting to collage different takes (e.g., Big Fun), an approach that anticipated hip-hop. Davis prioritised creative thinking, stating, "Bad music is what will ruin music, not the instruments". He remained contemporary by continually embracing new technology.

Wigmore Hall 125: Jordi Savall and Hespèrion XXI

concert of music by Monteverdi and his contemporaries. Jordi Savall and Hespèrion XXI have been an important part of the early music world for over half a century. Their festive concert places instrumental consort pieces from Elizabethan and Jacobean England together with pioneering compositions from the aristocratic courts of Italy and Germany culminating in a performance of Monteverdi's stylised pastoral drama about the lovers Tirsi and Clori.

Also in today's Classical Live, Mark Forrest introduces a recent performance from Salzburg from today's featured conductor, Finnish musician Klaus Mäkelä, of powerful music by Mahler: the 5th Symphony which includes the celebrated Adagietto written as love letter to his wife Alma; and there's more from star harpsichordist Jean Rondeau in France, with his own take on keyboard music from the French Baroque.

Miles Davis 100

On the Corner

This week Kate Molleson explores the life and work of a cultural icon: trumpeter, composer and bandleader Miles Davis, who was born 100 years ago this week and remains one of the most innovative and influential figures in 20th-century music. Kate is joined throughout the week by the leading American jazz critic Nate Chinen. Together, they'll survey his vast recorded output which spans five decades, prioritising his own compositions but also appreciating the art of improvisation as spontaneous composition.

Miles Davis was born in Illinois 26 May 1926 and grew up in East St. Louis. He enrolled at the Juilliard School of Music in New York City in 1944 but was quickly drawn to the bebop scene of 52nd Street, playing alongside Charlie Parker, with whom he made some of his first key recordings. From that point on, he was at the heart of almost every new development in jazz, from hard bop to post-bop, third stream, fusion and beyond, hand-picking key collaborators for his ever-changing sound, including composer-arranger Gil Evans, saxophonists John Coltrane and Wayne Shorter, keyboardists Herbie Hancock and Joe Zawinul and, in his later years, the bassist and producer Marcus Miller. He made it his mission to be at the vanguard culturally and musically, rejecting convention and tradition in favour of pursuing innovation and the new thing.

Kate Molleson and Nate Chinen explore a tumultuous and pivotal period in the story of Miles Davis moving from the end of the 1960s into the 70s with a series of astonishing albums which threatened to send the world of jazz into two irrevocably different directions. Miles Davis was embracing technology, electric pianos and guitars, non-Western instruments and exploring new forms and ways of playing, first with the proto-ambient In a Silent Way and then Bitches Brew – recorded immediately after Woodstock and the Summer of Love, and connecting with fans of Jimi Hendrix and Sly Stone. The purists were not impressed, and Miles continued to have an antagonistic relationship with both the industry and establishment.

Wigmore Hall 125: Alexandre Kantorow

Gold Medal Tchaikovsky Competition winner Alexandre Kantorow performs a captivating programme of music, bridging Medtner's emotionally intense first sonata with the profound heights of Beethoven's final piano sonata. After his five-star 2025 BBC Proms performance of Saint-Saëns's Fifth Piano Concerto, The Times wrote of Kantorow's "buoyancy, delicacy and grace," and this evening's concert will surely be filled with these compelling qualities.

Miles Beyond

Style Icon

As part of Miles Davis 100, journalist Kevin Le Gendre explores the impact of Miles Davis on jazz and beyond - into popular culture.

Davis's image evolved alongside his music from the mid-1940s all the way up until his death in 1991. His early look featured sharp suits (Workin') and casual authority (the iconic olive green shirt on Milestones). In the late '60s, influenced by his wife Betty Mabry and artists like Jimi Hendrix, he adopted looser, flamboyant, Afrocentric styles (dashikis, patch suede pants). His later 1980s outfits were outlandish, featuring shoulder pads and giant shades. Beyond aesthetics, his style held social and political weight; for instance, his elegant white jacket was stained with blood after being arrested outside a New York music venue in 1959. He defied convention up to his final album, Doo-Bop, showcasing a toned, bare-chested look.

Kate Molleson and Nate Chinen with the last chapter in the life and work of Miles Davis. Following an intense period of creativity and an impossibly excessive lifestyle, Miles Davis withdrew from the scene in the 1970s and went off-grid. We hear how a few trusted people helped him to recovery and how, instead of trading on past success, he resolved to be at the vanguard once again, inspired by contemporary artists he admired like Prince, and teaming up with the bassist and producer Marcus Miller for albums such as Amandla and Tutu.

Miles Beyond

A New Standard

As part of Miles 100, journalist Kevin Le Gendre explores the impact of Miles Davis on jazz and beyond - into popular culture.

Miles Davis broadened the jazz repertoire. In his early career, he drew from the Great American Songbook, playing songs by musical theatre composers. From the 1960s, he played mostly original music, before returning to covering popular music. The 1980s was marked by controversy, as he created original takes on contemporary pop hits, including Cyndi Lauper's Time After Time and Scritti Politti's Perfect Way. Miles's open-mindedness and artistic freedom, often alienating critics, legitimised the coverage of any new songs by jazz artists, influencing later artists like Herbie Hancock and The Bad Plus to embrace "new standards". From repertoire, to electronics, to extended technique and visual style, Miles was the ultimate transformer.

Miles Davis 100: Laura Jurd and Anthony Joseph in session

Verity Sharp shares the results of our latest remote collaboration session, bringing together trumpeter Laura Jurd and poet Anthony Joseph to celebrate the legacy of American jazz icon Miles Davis (1926-1991) on his centenary.

Miles Davis was a trumpeter, bandleader and composer, widely regarded as one of the most influential figures in the history of jazz and 20th-century music. In a career spanning nearly five decades, Davis was at the forefront of almost all major stylistic developments in jazz, constantly pursuing innovation, and his legacy continues to inspire to this day.

Kind of Blue by Miles Davis was the first album that trumpeter Laura Jurd ever bought. An inspiration for her ever since, she has gone on to develop her own distinctive musical voice bridging jazz and folk, leading the Mercury Prize-nominated band Dinosaur and working extensively as a composer for ensembles ranging from jazz groups to contemporary chamber orchestras. For this session, Jurd connects remotely with Trinidad-born poet, novelist, academic and musician, Anthony Joseph. Described as a 'leader of the black avant-garde in Britain', Joseph's work and performance occupies a space between surrealism, jazz, and the rhythms of Caribbean speech and music. Together they take inspiration from the legacy of Miles Davis in this exclusive Late Junction collaboration session.
